

Olympic bid survey biased, professorsays

'No denying' it pushes the pro side — though officials do deny

Helen Pike Metro | Calgary

A survey released Wednesday by the Calgary Bid Exploration Committee is garnering a different kind of feedback.

Amanda Williams, an adjunct professor teaching research methods at MRU, said the survey is weighted to the "pro" bid outcome. The preamble as written has commentary that doesn't cite readily available sources to tell the reader what to make of it.

"It definitely favours the pro bid side, there's no denying," Williams said. "The entire survey is quite strongly constructed on the pro side and wouldn't necessarily have had to be that way."

Williams went through the survey and counted line-for-line the pro and con statements, looked at the language used and hyperboles such as billions in economic benefits versus millions in cost. Her conclusion: it's biased.

Sean Beardow, CBEC spokesperson, said their intent was to develop a publicly accessible tool to give Calgarians the opportunity to share how they feel about the Olympic Bid, good or bad.

"We worked with a reputable research company," Beardow said. "Ensuring neutrality in everything we do is really a top consideration."

To further emphasize that neutrality, CBEC flips the order of pro and con narratives every time the survey is taken.

Ramsay may face LRT train slicing through community

Helen Pike Metro | Calgary

Ramsay taking a fall for the good of the city.

That's how the community feels after receiving notices about the Green Line team's changing tune when it comes to the future LRT alignment in their mailboxes this week.

After months, countless hours of community engagement and volunteering, most thought the Ramsay and Inglewood alignment had finished shifting.

But the city's Green Line team told Metro nothing on the west side of the community has been cemented in front of council yet, and they are bringing options they previously shelved back to the table.

"The Green Line vision is

Erin Joslin holds a map of Ramsay, one of the city's oldest neighbourhoods. The City of Calgary is now considering sending a CTrain straight through the community. HELEN PIKE/METRO looking at building the best LRT for all of Calgary — these are really significant and complex decisions that we're looking at," said Fabiola MacIntyre, manager of the Green Line team.

"This is a very different system, this is not the LRT that Calgarians know running down Crowchild Trail — it's something that offers us the opportunity to re-invision...to make sure it's servicing the need of all Calgarians."

She said "operational challenges" emerged in the alignment they had presented to council. Going north of the Victoria Park Transit facility meant building one of the tightest turns in the entire line's plans – all around an already bustling bus barn.

Putting the Green Line on the north side of the property would further constrain the area that sees more than 300 buses come and go daily.

The renewed proposals would see the line going along MacDonald Avenue and cutting the north tip of Ramsay off with a low-floor train along MacDonald Avenue. And for the community, taking an option that runs more tracks through Ramsay just doesn't

"We've gone back two steps," said Erin Joslin, Ramsay Community Association Vice-President External.

"It takes the north tip of our community, and cuts it off, we're just a small little community...it's a physical barrier that will be there between us and our neighbours. It's not a safe little tram."

She said the city has taken countless volunteer hours, and resident time working on engagement that doesn't consider two options that would take the train directly through the tight-knit community.

> Coun. Gian-Carlo Carra is dubious of the controversial MacDonald Avenue alignment, but underlined how important it is that Calgarians reframe their view of what the atgrade Green Line will look like.

These are really

decisions that

we're looking at.

Fabiola MacIntyre

"If there is a cost benefit analysis to be won for that supposed route alignment, they're going to have to prove it," said Carra. "They're going to have to improve the communications now and moving forward with Ramsay, they're going to have to make sure network connectivity is only improved by any moves made."

2015 and September 2016.

The results show Metro Calgary has 452000 cumulative readers over a 5-day period. The Calgary Sun has 413,000,

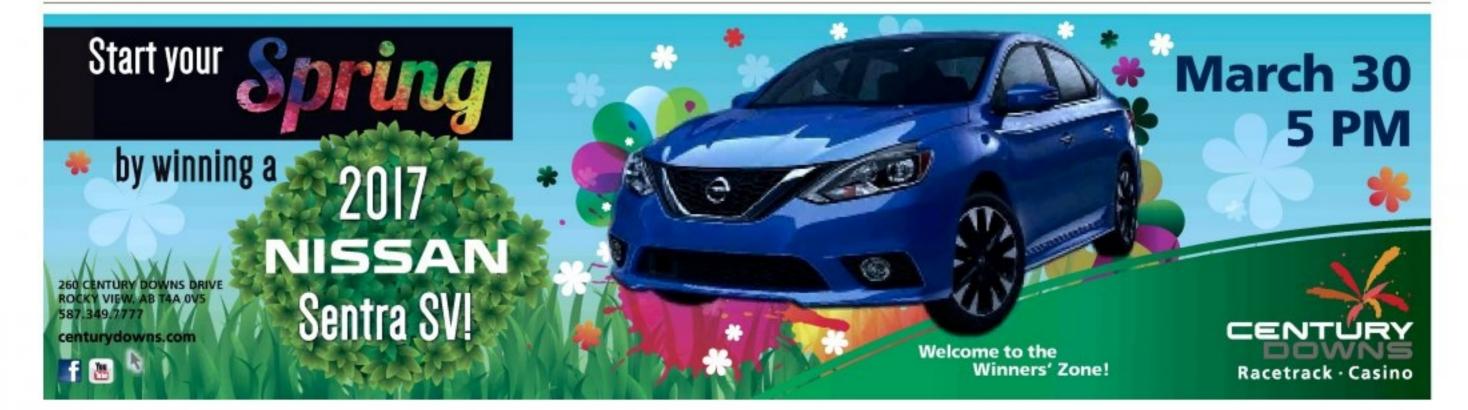

364, 000

Nationally, Metro's daily readership across seven English markets was steady at 1.68 million, making it again the most

Elsewhere, in Vancouver, Metro has widened its lead over 24Hrs, holding the third place spot in the city with 297,000 over the previous quarter. Behind only the Toronto Star, Metro Toronto has an average weekday readership of 645,000.

'Social licence'? No, not buying it

POLL

Majority don't believe carbon tax aided pipelines

Brodie Thomas Metro | Calgary

A majority of Albertans just aren't buying the idea that the carbon tax somehow helped with federal approval on pipelines, according to a new ThinkHQ/Metro poll.

The Notley government has said Alberta's creation of a carbon tax gave the province the social licence it needed to get federal approval on those pipelines.

The survey of 1,357 Albertans found more than 60 per cent believe the federal government definitely or probably would have approved two pipeline applications earlier this year without the carbon tax.

Bad news for the NDP, says ThinkHQ public-affairs president Marc Henry.

"This notion that the NDP climate plan will get credit for these new pipelines is just not bearing true for them," said Henry. "They're really not getting any credit in return for a significant policy decision, and it's probably the most significant policy that they've approved."

What's more, the poll suggests carbon rebates aren't buying Albertans' love.

The numbers show acceptance of the tax was not tied to whether or not someone got a refund — which went to households earning under $100,000 per year.

"The expectation would be if you're getting your money back, maybe your acceptance of the new tax regime would increase. It just doesn't show up in any significant number," said Henry.

Overall, 64 per cent of Albertans polled were opposed to the expanded carbon tax. Looking at those polled who personally received a carbon-tax rebate, the disapproval rating only dropped to 59 per cent.

Looking at past data, Henry has found that support for the tax has not grown at all. In fact, opposition grew by 3 per cent.

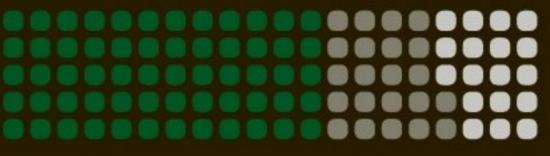

This poll used the Voice of Alberta panel and the Angus Reid Forum to survey 1,357 people across the province, with the results weighted to reflect the gender, age and region of Alberta according to Statistics Canada.

The survey uses a representative but non-random sample, so margin of error isn't applicable, However, a probability sample of this size would yield a margin of error of +/- 2.7 percentage points at a 95% confidence interval.

Police investigating suspicious death

The Calgary police homicide unit is investigating a suspicious death after a man was found dead in a car on Centre Street.

Staff Sgt. Asif Rashid said police were called to the community of Crescent Heights at the intersection of Centre Street and 12 Avenue NE around 4:20 a.m. after a witness reported of a man who appeared to be in medical distress in his car.

When police arrived they found a man deceased in a vehicle stopped at the intersection lights on Centre Street, and the vehicle with bullet holes in it.

A firearm was also seized at the scene, though investigators are still working to determine its connection to the incident.

An autopsy is scheduled for Friday at which point the identity of the individual, and the cause of death will likely be determined, according to Rashid.

A second potential scene was later identified by investigators at a home in the 200 block of 10 Avenue NE.

"There was some preliminary intelligence at the first scene that suggested there might be a connection between the two, but it's too early in the investigation to know for sure," said Rashid.

He also said it's difficult to say if the incident was targeted, but that there is no evidence to suggest it was random, adding that police are currently gathering any available CCTV footage from the area.

Anyone with information is asked to contact the Homicide Unit tip line at 403-428-8877 or Crime Stoppers at 1-800-222-8477.

Declare it an emergency

OPIOIDS

Advocates issue demand amid rising death toll

Elizabeth Cameron For Metro | Calgary

Advocates are calling on the province to declare the opioid crisis in Alberta a public health emergency as the death toll from overdoses continues to rise.

Declaring a public health emergency wouldn't give the government any resources that they don't already have, according to Dr. Karen Grimsrud, chief medical officer of health for Alberta Health.

"It's important to clarify the terminology," she said.

A public health emergency must be declared via legislation under Alberta's Public Health Act, which was written in response to pandemics such as influenza or other communicable diseases, according to Dr. Grimsrud.

"The tools that surround a public health emergency are all about (communicable pandemics), and are really not applicable to the crisis we're dealing with now," Dr. Grimsrud said.

Dr. David Swann, a vocal advocate for those struggling with addictions and co-author of Alberta's Mental Health Review. disagrees.

"(Declaring an emergency) mobilizes resources and focuses a more coordinated effort," he said.

He says he's called on the provincial government to make the distinction for "at least" the past six months.

"I think it's clear that when a medical officer or health minister declares state of emergency, the focus from all related departments becomes stronger, and there is a much stronger commitment to gathering and reporting information more quickly and ensuring the resources are found," said Dr. Swann.

On Tuesday, several dozen people held a demonstration outside Calgary's city hall, part of a Canada-wide day of action on the opioid crisis.

"We're pushing for no more overdose deaths from fentanyl, or any other drugs," said Chelsea Burnham, an addictions and mental health outreach worker who has managed her heroin addiction for several years with opioid replacement therapy (ORT).

She was demonstrating to demand more action from all levels of government.

"Life won't wait and we need to get these things done now... people are dying in mass numbers," she said.

Professor calls for anti-bullying action

GOVERNMENT

Expert says province must assess need for legislation

Lucie Edwardson Metro | Calgary

Dr. Kelly Sundberg, a justice professor for Mount Royal University, is drawing from experience when he questions whether or not it's time for anti-workplace bullying legislation in Alberta.

Over the last year Metro has reported about the ongoing human resource issues faced by Calgary Police Service including allegations of bullying and sexual harassment - most recently prompting 13 current and former members to seek outside legal counsel and file formal complaints against the service.

Sundberg said a few years back the justice department at Mount Royal University paid around $250,000 to investigate allegations of bullying and harassment within their department - and he wonders if the CPS is heading in the same direction.

"Maybe the Notley government has to think, 'Whoa, here are two public institutions where we have seen a lot of public concern, and both of them have a lack of transparency and can't release the report because of personnel issues, well maybe the law has to change," he said.

Christina Gray, Alberta's minister of labour, said she believes workplace bullying is unacceptable, which is why she was pleased when Calgary-Klein MLA Craig Coolahan introduced a private member's bill last fall to protect Alberta employees from bullying and harassment at their place of work.

"While it's unfortunate that his bill was not debated before the end of the sitting, our government is committed to continuing the conversation and working with Albertans to find ways to better support workers," she said.

Nobody is immune when there are actually no mandated policies.

MLA Craig Coolahan

Coolahan said although the bill is essentially "dead on the table," he's still working with the ministry to get the legislation passed and they're having discussion about what's actually required to stop bullying and harassment in the workplace.

"Nobody is immune when there are actually no mandated policies in the workplace. I think that is the bottom line. Without having the legislation behind a workplace policy it really doesn't have any teeth,"

Dr. Kelly Sundberg said he thinks the Notley government should evaluate if Alberta needs laws against bullying in the workplace. JENNIFER FRIESEN/FOR METRO

Bus drivers want faster snow removal

TRANSPORTATION

Drop-off areas should be more of a priority

Lucie Edwardson Metro | Calgary

Calgary school bus drivers are concerned for the safety of their students getting on and off their buses in sometimes waist deep snow banks and would like to see the city make schools a priority for snow removal.

Diane Hartsook has been a school bus driver for 16 years, and says every time there is a significant snow dump snow removal outside schools and at school bus stops is slow to happen - unless they're on city transit routes - and students are forced to get on and off the bus in sometimes thigh or waist deep snow.

Hartsook, who currently does routes to St. Stephen's and St. Catherine's schools as well as charters and field trips for both school boards, told Metro she doesn't expect roads with schools on them to be cleared right away, but would hope they could become more of a priority.

"I know there are priority routes, but when it's over a week before I can get in and out of a school and it becomes a safety issue for the kids it should become a priority for the city," she said.

City of Calgary roads department spokesman, Chris McGeachy said the city has a seven-day snow removal plan, with priority 1-4 routes.

Priority 1 and 2 routes have a bare pavement policy, while priority 3 and 4 routes are addressed later and are made "drivable and safe."

Economy recovering, deficit still at $10.8B

A rebounding oil sector is delivering an extra $1.5 million to the Alberta government this year, but Finance Minister Joe Ceci says that money — and more — has already been spent and the deficit will remain at $10.8 billion.

Critics say no matter whether times are good or bad Premier Rachel Notley's government lacks the will and the fibre to make hard decisions needed to balance the books.

"We're still very early in the recovery phase. Alberta families are worried about the basics and the government is focused on basics," Ceci said Thursday as he released the third-quarter update for 2016-17.

"We're here to make life better for Alberta families."

The update shows Alberta is on track to take in $42.9 billion this fiscal year, which ends March 31. But $1.5 million in gains are offset by an extra $2.6 billion in spending.

Finance Minister Joe Ceci DEAN BENNETT/THE CANADIAN PRESS

The province, at the suggestion of the auditor general, is booking a $1.1-billion accounting expense now for payments to be made to operators over the next 14 years to move the electrical industry off coal-fired power by 2030.

The province is also spending $774 million more than planned to cover higher operating costs, mainly in health, education and social services. There is another $818 million for disaster assistance needed after severe flooding in 2013 and last spring's Fort McMurray wildfire.

To keep the deficit from ballooning to $11.5 billion. the province is throwing in a $700-million cushion it had kept to guard against low oil prices.

Government borrowing, including money to pay operating and capital costs, is expected to reach $32.3 billion against $19.7 billion in the Heritage Savings Trust Fund.

Debt servicing costs this year are pegged at just over $1 billion.

Ric McIver, interim leader of the Progressive Conservatives, said the government does not have the will to rein in spending.

'They can't make the tough decisions that Albertans need them to make," he said. "They can't differentiate between what Alberta needs and what they would like to offer up to get them re-elected (in 2019)." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Canada Task Force 2 Alberta deploys for simulated quake

Elizabeth Cameron For Metro | Calgary

If you found yourself trapped under a forklift, don't worry the Canada Task Force 2 Alberta (CAN-TF2) has a plan for that.

Rescuing someone pinned by heavy machinery is just one of the numerous simulated exercises members of CAN-TF2 have been practicing to prepare for a catastrophic event such as an earthquake or tsunami in British Columbia - should 'the big one' hit, this team is prepared.

"In a training exercise, if things don't go exactly right, we can take a step back and make it a teaching moment, so that when the real thing happens we're ready," said Matt White, a firefighter from Red Deer and disaster specialist with CAN-TF2.

CAN-TF2 is comprised of 150 police officers, logistics specialists, paramedics, physicians, and other highly skilled personnel who volunteer their time.

"We brought all of those talents together to create a response for a major event, in this case a tsunami or earthquake scenario," said Tom Sampson, chief of the Calgary Emergency Management Agency.

The most recent deployment for CAN-TF2 was to Fort Mc-Murray for the 2016 wildfires.

The team was also there when southern Alberta was flooding, and when Slave Lake experienced their own devastating wildfire in 2011.

Kensington's 'kitty kingdom'

The hybrid space will host cats for adoption

Aaron Chatha Metro | Calgary

After months of online purring, the Regal Cat Café has finally signed a lease in Kensington, and is expected to open this spring.

On the one hand, it's pretty much what it sounds like: a café, offering favourites like coffees, teas and snacks. But the restaurant also includes an area called the Kitty Kingdom.

On any given day, the space will host 10 to 12 cats, which café-goers are welcome and encouraged - to interact with.

"I love coffee, I love cats, and if you put the two of them together that just makes them even better," said Tia Wieler, who founded the café with her husband

The MEOW Foundation in Calgary provides all the cats, and every single one is up for adoption for anyone that 'accidentally' falls in love at the café.

The Wielers have been in love with cats long before they themselves fell in love, or even met each other. They both grew up with kitties, and when they heard about cat cafés in other cities, they made it their mission to start one up in Calgary.

"I think the most relaxing thing in the world is to have a cat in your lap, purring, sleeping and just pet it," smiled Kevin Wieler.

The cats are kept separate from the cooking and serving areas, which is just as a matter of hygiene. Visitors however are encouraged to walk into the Kitty Kingdom, take some selfies, play and have fun.

The cats selected for the café are chosen based on their health and sociability.

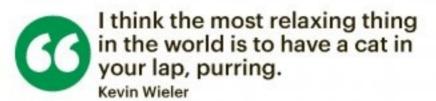

If the kitty kings and queens need a break, there's a private back room for them to slink off to.

The café also boasts high perches, from which the cats can watch the petty humans in a kingdom-esque setting, and from a safe distance.

The Wielers are also reaching out to local vendors and crafters so they can offer locally made cat products in the shop.

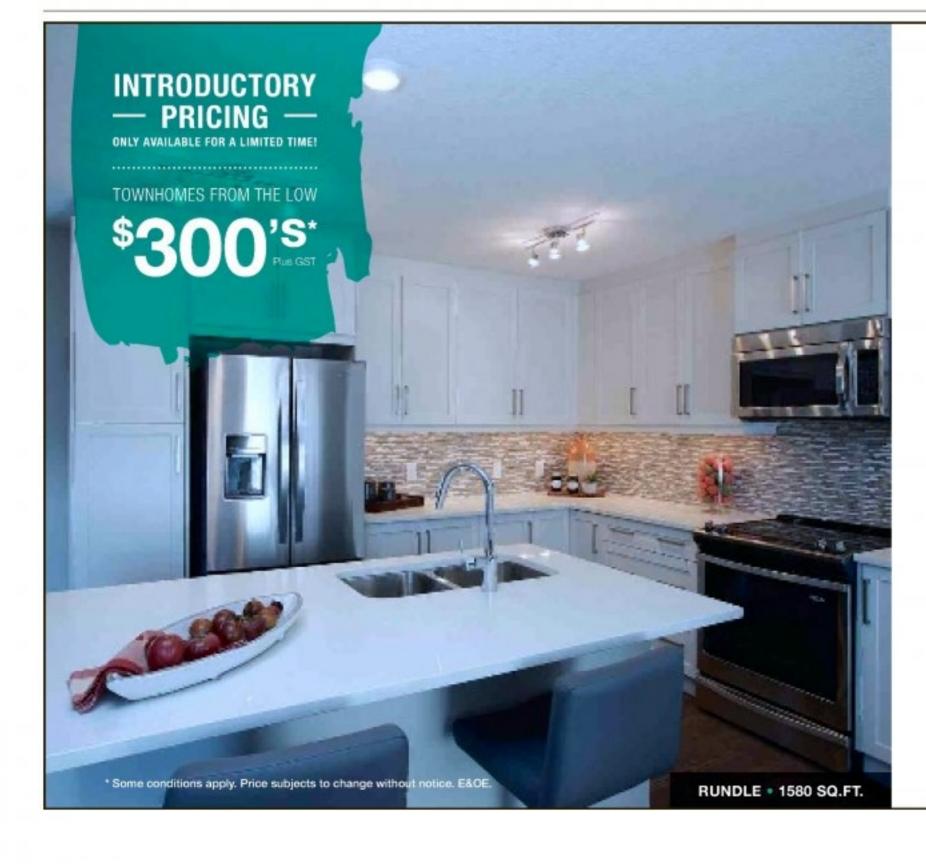

They want to build a community of cat lovers, and they're not kitten around about it.

For regular updates on the Regal Cat Café, visit www. regalcatcafe.com.

Tia and Kevin Wieler will crown 10 to 12 kitty king and queens to dwell at the Regal Cat Café, although currently they're hanging at the MEOW Foundation. ELIZABETH CAMERON/METRO

Public Interest Alberta press conference, to pitch a proposal to get more public funding for public schools. KEVIN TUONG/FOR METRO

'Struggling to pull pennies'

Board, teachers union call to end private school funding

Kevin Maimann Metro Edmonton

The Alberta Teachers Association and the Edmonton Public School Board joined a coalition of 14 organizations calling for an end to public funds for private schools Thursday.

Public Interest Alberta organized a press conference calling for a phasing out of public funding for private schools except those cater to special needs students over three years.

The groups suggested $100 million could then be redirected to public, Catholic and francophone school boards to reduce class sizes, reduce mandatory school fees, increase classroom supports and beef up school lunch programs.

"It's going to be a very tough budget year. The government has been very clear that there is no new money, they are struggling to pull pennies where they can. This is an opportunity where we can think about what would make the most difference for kids," said Edmonton Public School Board Chair Michael Janz.

"(Private schools) don't have publicly elected school boards. they can accept and reject students, they are separate private businesses that are able to charge sometimes enormous tuitions," he said.

Janz pointed out five Canadian provinces have already ended private school funding, including Ontario, where private schools are still thriving.

John Jagersma, Executive Director of the Association of Independent Schools and Colleges in Alberta, said private schools that specifically opportunity where serve a public good and cutting their funds would only punish the 34,000 students that attend them.

Michael Janz He said ending subsidies would also push private school students into the public system, where they would then be publicly funded at a higher rate.

"The suggestion that taking funding away from independent schools somehow creates this pot of money for public education initiatives is patently false," Jagersma said.

Man pleads guilty to killing wife

A southern Alberta man says he went for a beer after strangling his wife before burning her remains in an abandoned building 11 years ago.

Duane Redelback pleaded guilty to manslaughter in the death of Ruth Degayo in a Calgary court Thursday.

Redelback was originally charged in 2015 with seconddegree murder and indignity to a human body.

He reported to police in January 2006 that Degayo, who was 40, was missing.

Human remains were discovered by men in a building near the Mount Yamnuska trail head that month and DNA analysis determined that they were those of De-

The judge in the case sentenced Redelback to 15 years in prison with 27 months credit for time served in cus-

Redelback eventually confessed to the murder during an undercover police operation and said that he had intended to go out for a beer when he and Degayo got into an argument.

After killing Degayo he put her remains inside a suitcase and put it in the truck of his car.

He then met a friend for a beer before driving to the disposal site, pouring gas on her body and lighting it on fire.

Curling tourney a long time coming

Downtown's first outdoor bonspiel in a century

Jennifer Friesen For Metro | Calgary

As the railroad came to the West, it brought along one of Canada's most beloved pastimes.

From gliding on frozen ponds in Priddis to matches on Calgary's own Elbow River, Scottish railroad workers carried curling to Alberta in the 1800s, according to Dennis Havrelock. museum curator for the Southern Alberta Curling Association.

But, with Calgary's chinookprone winters, Havrelock said there is no mention of a large outdoor curling bonspiel happening in the city in more than a century.

"There have been some smaller ones, but there's no mention of outdoor bonspiels of any magnitude," he continued. "The chinooks and sunshine would have made it very difficult to have any outdoor ice you could depend on."

It may have been a long time coming, but the Lougheed House is hosting the Beltline Bonspiel at its new garden rink on Saturday.

In celebration of the historic home's 120th anniversary and Canada's 150th birthday, the Lougheed House is opening its doors during the event. Admission will be free all day, with the restaurant and bar open and ready for those seeking refuge from the cold.

Outside on the rink, one curling lane will be open to the public from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m., while the second lane will see four community teams face off in a bonspiel.

"Curling outdoors always made for more enjoyment," said Havrelock. "As far as crowding around a sheet of ice, watching the game, having some fun and being close to the curlers. I think this (event) should be a lot of fun and introduce some people to curling who haven't participated in it yet."

The curlers have been a part of our community since day one.

Matt Masters

Matt Masters, organizer of the Lougheed House's Canada 150 events, said they wanted to create a winter event open to everyone — but that stumbling across Calgary's curling roots was "a bit of an accident."

"It's kind of like a hidden history in Calgary," he said. "The curlers have been a part of our community since day one, but not everyone knows that story."

The Calgary Curling Club was founded in 1888, and by the 1980s the city had 14 active curling rinks with 150 sheets of ice - one of which was the Big Four on the Stampede grounds, which was the world's largest curling rink at the time with 48 sheets of ice, according to Havrelock.

And this history is getting a special regeneration with the Beltline Bonspiel.

The four community teams will be competing for the Brewery Trophy. It was made for the Calgary Brewing and Malting Company in 1915, but was last awarded to Alberta curler Hector Gervais in 1965.

The Southern Alberta Curling Association museum at the Calgary Curling Club has donated the massive metallic trophy for the event, along with other artifacts to display inside the

"I almost fell over the first time I saw it," laughed Masters. "And, honestly, the first thing I thought was that we've got to hoist this in the air once again — and we will."

The Brewery Trophy was made in 1915 for the Calgary Brewing and Malting Company, and will be awarded to the community team who wins the tournament.

Farrell skeptical about Olympic bid survey results

Helen Pike Metro Calgary

Experts aren't the only people looking at the survey with a skeptical eye.

Coun. Druh Farrell, who has been tirelessly adamant about looking at an Olympic bid possibilities through a dispassionate lens, not to get swept up in the hubbub and fanfare, but seriously and pragmatically consider if it's right for Calgary.

"We need a healthy amount of skepticism, not cynicism," said Farrell. "As far as a public read of a bid, it's important they understand the pros and cons, and the risks as well as the benefits, and I'm not sure that was explained as well as it should."

She said she will be approaching the outcome of the survey with healthy skepticism.

"It wasn't a push poll, but there is an appearance of bias," she said.

That's a bias that was clear to Amanda Williams, a professor specializing in research methods at Mount Royal University.

Her analysis of the survey revealed the survey is a tool that "quite easily favours the bid position over the non-bid position."

"It sounds slightly trivial," Williams explained underlining the economic portion of the survey that puts billions of economic benefit against millions in bid costs. "Those numbers really aren't contextualized at all, which they could have easily done."

Commonly, Williams said she sees footnotes to source claims made in surveys.

CBEC has a table to follow for establishing whether or not the Olympic bid is feasible. In that table, a calculation gives a hint of where the survey, and other public engagement will fall in deciding whether or not Calgary will host the 2026 winter games.

Economic + Social Value is (greater or equal to) the city's net investment.

But the online survey is just a portion of the committee's engagement plans. Beardow said there's still a phone survey, interviews with community associations and a dedicated research vendor.

Results from the public questionnaire will be included into CBEC's final report, which will be presented to Calgary city council by July.

Youth Singers celebrate three decades of passion

Aaron Chatha Metro | Calgary

Shirley Penner is celebrating 30 years of leading the Calgary Youth Singers from a Mount Royal College experiment to an international performing group.

Penner recalled how three decades ago, she was working at Mount Royal and was asked to start a program for junior high singers.

'I said sure, if I could do it my way," Penner laughed. "That would mean, I would not only teach the choral and the music - but I would add other elements, like dancing and acting."

The philosophy has been one of the keys to the group's success. Yes, they're called youth singers, but Penner has always left the door open for a good

"When I started, I didn't have any goals. I just started a classroom for two hours a week," she said. "We seem to fill a niche that needed filling. It started to grow, and I grew with it."

She started with about 27 junior high schools taking part, but the group's popularity quickly boomed. It reached the point where Penner decided to quit her job at the college and work with the Calgary Youth Singers full-time.

Shirley Penner Now they have their own building, are 500 members strong, with more than 15 divisions of singers, which start at ages three and up. The group performs more than 100 times each year, including consistent collaborations with the Calgary Opera, and they've also travelled to more than 20 countries over the world.

But it's not really the shows or the music that stand out to Penner. It's the growth she sees in her young pupils, as young leaders.

About half of her current staff actually came up through the youth singers program.

Lauren Thompson started with Calgary Youth Singers 19 years ago, and is now the marketing coordinator and the manager of her own division.

"I've found a home here," she smiled. "I've travelled the world. I've been to South America, I've been to China. I've not only performed, but I've travelled with my friends and had an experience in the world that not a lot of people have been able to do." Now the Youth Singers are celebrating their anniversary in style - with a fundraiser and party called Hearts Out.

Buckets Blakes talks world-record breaking shots

Aaron Chatha Metro Calgary

The Harlem Globetrotters are taking their world tour through Calgary on March 1 and 2 - and that includes the legendary Buckets Blakes.

Blakes has been playing with the Globetrotters for 15 years, he set the world record for most underhanded shots from half-court in one minute, and recently he broke the record for highest basketball shot ever taken in North America by shooting off the Tower of America's in San Antonio. The ball fell 583 ft - and into the net.

He was in Calgary talking to students ahead of the two

I'm sure you get asked that a lot - but how did you pull off the record-setting basket?

There's no way to possibly practice for that particular shot. But you get confidence from making shots from high places. I had already done 100 ft, 200 ft and 300 ft prior to that - so I guess those were my practice shots.

How did you feel when you sunk the record-breaker?

Oh man, it was a great feeling. I had to double check - I mean, I witnessed it go in, but I wasn't sure exactly. It was a delayed reaction.

Take me to the beginning where did your passion for basketball start?

Not only do I have an older cousin who was a great basketball player in high school, who played basketball with me and my two brothers, but I asked my parents for a Nerf hoop at five-years-old.

They didn't get it fast enough, so I took one of my dad's hats and I cut a hole in the top of it. Then, I flipped it over and slipped the hat in-between the door and the doorframe.

I shot a tennis ball in there and that was my first hoop.

My two older brothers helped me get it up there.

I played other sports too. but by the time you get to high school you got to make a decision. I narrowed the sports I played down to football, basketball and track and field. I had a full-ride scholarship in all three of them. I chose basketball because it was indoors. Phoenix, Arizona, where I'm from, is very hot.

I didn't get drafted in the NBA, I got drafted in the CBA the CBA went bankrupt. I went over to Europe, played there, and when I came back, one of the Globetrotter scouts gave me a call.

What's your favourite trick to do on the court?

One of my favourite things to do is my underhand, halfcourt shot - but I've actually moved back to the other threepoint line.

Study shows plight of detained Canadian kids

One boy spent 803 days in an immigration holding centre

Canada has placed more than 200 Canadian children in immigration detention with their non-status parents since 2011, alongside hundreds of formally detained non-Canadian children, says University of Toronto study.

Based on data obtained from the Canada Border Services Agency, the U of T International Human Rights Program found at least 241 Canadian-born children — an average of 48 a year were held in the immigration holding centre in Toronto between 2011 and 2015. The data do not cover detention facilities in other parts of Canada. On average, they spent 36 days at the detention centre with their incarcerated parents, with one boy spending 803 days — over two years — in the detention facility.

Two-thirds of the detained children were housed there for longer than a week and about 31 per cent were held for longer than a month. Eighty-five per cent of the children were under age 6.

Lena Alexander, a failed refugee from Grenada, was held at the immigration holding centre with her Canadian-born children Crystal and Dameon in 2005. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

"Children who experience even brief periods of detention have extremely negative psychological reactions that often persist long after they are released," warned the 63-page study, Invisible Citizens: Canadian Children in Immigration Detention, released Thursday.

"Children who are spared detention but are separated from their detained parents experience similarly grave consequences for their mental health."

Interviews by researchers with nine detained and formerly detained mothers of Canadian children from the Middle East, West Africa, Central America and the Caribbean found the children had difficulty sleeping, lost their appetite, lost their interest in play, and developed symptoms of depression and separation anxiety, as well as a variety of physical symptoms.

"Many of these symptoms persisted after release from detention," the study warned.

According to the border services policy, Canadian children should only accompany their detained parents if there are no family members or friends to care for them, if they are still being breastfed, are too young to be separated from parents or have health issues.

Manitoba steps up to help asylum seekers

Botelho-Urbanski For Metro | Winnipeg

After calling on the federal government to adopt a "coordinated approach" in dealing with the influx of asylum seekers, the premier of Manitoba announced his own plans to dispatch emergency resources on Thursday.

Premier Brian Pallister and Minister of Education and Training Ian Wishart announced 14 emergency beds, $70,000 in funding for MANSO (the Manitoba Association of Newcomer Serving Organizations) and $110,000 for Welcome Place in 2017-2018.

The money for MANSO will be put toward hiring a refugee response coordinator, while the funding for Welcome Place will provide more access to support services, like paralegal advice and transportation from Emerson to Winnipeg, for refugee claimants.

"Manitobans have never, ever turned their backs on people," said Pallister.

'Extreme vetting' is not really so extreme

U.S. President Donald Trump's plans for "extreme vetting" of migrants may seem a stark contrast to Ottawa's "openness" approach, but the two countries' systems are more closely aligned than many people would like to believe.

Trump's stance on immigrants and refugees cannot be more different from Prime Minister Justin Trudeau's. That contradiction was on full display at their joint news conference at the White House after the two leaders' recent first meeting in Washington.

But despite the general impression that Canada has more tolerant and lax border security than its neighbour to the south, experts on both sides of the border say the countries have similar security screening processes to keep suspected terrorists and criminals out.

"We've had a very close partnership with Canada. Canadians are our trusted counterparts. Obviously there's a tremendous amount of information-sharing between our intelligence and law enforcement services," said John Sandweg, former general counsel to Homeland Security. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Author Boyden facing plagiarism allegations

Accusations of similarities between one of Canadian author Joseph Boyden's texts and a story by an Ojibway storyteller have now surfaced, barely a month after the authenticity of his Indigenous identity came under question.

An article focuses on similarities found in a small book by Ron Geyshick called Te Bwe Win and a story titled "Bearwalker" that appeared in Boyden's 2001 short-story collection Born With a Tooth.

Higher fees cause dip in citizenship applications

The number of immigrants applying for citizenship has plunged by a whopping 50 per cent at the same time as Ottawa has stripped a record number of Canadians of their citizenship.

According to the latest data from the Immigration Department, only 56,446 new citizenship applications were received in the first nine months of last year, a sharp decline from the 111,993 during the same period in 2015.

The number of new citizens approved also dropped by 48 per cent from 198,119 to 111,435 over the same period, said Andrew Griffith, a retired director general of the department who obtained the data.

While the tightened language proficiency and longer residency requirements have contributed to the decline, the steep increase in citizenship application fees under the former Conservative government is a key factor, Griffith said.

The processing fee was raised from $100 to $300 in February 2015 and again to $530 later that year, with an additional $100 right-of-citizenship fee required once the application is approved. Historically, citizenship applications have averaged close to 200,000 per year. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

Milo Yiannopoulos announces his resignation from Breitbart.

Free speech is alive and well in U.S.

Rosemary Westwood has relocated from Canada to the U.S. She chronicles her observations in a weekly column.

Everyone loves a hypocrite, which is to say, hates. Hates with pleasure, really, and never more so than in politics.

Enter the left-wing glee this week when Milo Yiannopoulos lost his book deal, lost his job at the extreme right wing website Breitbart, and was kicked off the program for the Conservative Political Action Conference.

For the avowed free-speech loving right-wing of American politics, Yiannopoulos's resurfaced support of sex between men and 13-year-old boys was a bridge too far, and in rejecting him, they tripped over the "acceptable speech" line so many had, in their own glee, raged against for years.

Down came the implicit support for the extreme right, though not for conferencesponsor Breitbart itself, and out went white supremacist Richard Spencer when he tried to enter the conference on Thursday.

If this all sounds a little college lefty, safe-space-esque, "we don't condone that kind of talk here," that's because it is. And in becoming what they supposedly detest, a great swath of extreme right sympathizers masquerading as firstamendment lovers have been undone.

But the proof that no one need fear for the state of free speech, especially not anti-immigrant, anti-gay, anti-woman, anti-Muslim and anti-Black speech, came in it's most abundant, outrageous and glowing orange from a year and a half ago in Donald Trump himself. If Trump, who possesses an uncanny ability to mix pointed insults with otherwise inscrutable speech, could find himself in the oval office, America's problems do not include threats to rightwing free speech.

Shutting down Yiannopoulos' campus talks or criticizing publishers or firing that nonprofit director who called Michelle Obama an "ape in heels" — these are not attacks on free speech. They are simply evidence of consequence. As in, individual responsibility, or the right's political raison

It's somewhere on the spectrum of irritating to outright infuriating that I, and thousands of people on Twitter, feel the need to keep pointing out this idea of consequence, as well as the fact that no one is obliged to listen to you.

When I ran all this by a friend the other day, he shook his head in disgust at the very idea of spending a whole column, like this, yet again discussing the first amendment.

"Everyone talks about free speech," he said. "What about good ideas?"

What, indeed.

The cultural focus on what one can say does seemed to have drowned out questions about what's really worth listening to. Richard Spencer was swarmed by media as he was kicked out of CPAC. Yiannopoulos has found fame through bigotry. Donald Trump, well, we all know what happened to him.

And it wasn't a good idea.

Trump 'a disaster' on trans rights: Jenner

Caitlyn Jenner is taking President Donald Trump to task for his administration's reversal of a directive on transgender access to public school bathrooms.

Jenner addresses Trump in a video posted Thursday night on Twitter. She says, "From one Republican to another, this is a disaster."

The Trump White House has ended a directive issued during Barack Obama's presidency that told public schools to let transgender students use bathrooms and locker rooms of their chosen

Jenner is particularly critical of Attorney General Jeff Sessions, saying, "Apparently even becoming attorney general isn't enough to cure some people of their insecurities." Addressing Trump, the former Olympian says: "You made a promise to protect the LGBTQ community. Call me."

Meanwhile, bills to curtail transgender people's access to public restrooms are pending in about a dozen states, but even in conservative bastions such as Texas and Arkansas they may be doomed by high-powered opposition. The chief reason, according to transgender-rights leaders, is the backlash that hit North Carolina after its legislature approved a bill in 2016 requiring transgender people to use restrooms that correspond to the sex on their birth certificates. Several major sports organizations shifted events away and businesses decided not to expand in the state. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

DEPORTATIONS

U.S. crackdown prompts many to change up daily routines

In Orange County, California, dozens of immigrant parents have signed legal documents authorizing friends and relatives to pick up their children from school and access their bank accounts to pay their bills in the event they are arrested by immigration agents.

In Philadelphia, immigrants are carrying around wallet-size Know Your Rights guides in Spanish and English that explain what to do if they're rounded up.

And in New York, 23-yearold Zuleima Dominguez and other members of her Mexican family are careful about answering the door and start making worried phone calls when someone doesn't come home on time.

Around the country, President Donald Trump's efforts to crack down on the estimated 11 million immigrants

Jeanette Vizguerra, an undocumented immigrant in the U.S. for 20 years, has taken refuge in a church in Denver, Colorado, with her family for fear of being deported. AFP/GETTY IMAGES living illegally in the U.S. have spread fear and anxiety and led many people to brace for arrest and to change up their daily routines in hopes of not getting caught.

In El Paso, Texas, Carmen Ramos and her friends have developed a network to keep each other updated via text messages on where immigration checkpoints have been set up.

She said she also is making certain everything she does is in order at all times. She checks her taillights before leaving the house to make sure they are working. She won't speed and keeps a close eye on her surroundings.

"We are surprised that even a ticket can get us back to Mexico," said the 41-year-old Ramos, who with her husband and three children left Ciudad Juarez because of drug violence and death threats in 2008 and entered the U.S. on tourist visas that have since expired. "We wouldn't have anywhere to return."

An undocumented Guatemalan migrant mother and her son have called an Austin, Texas, church home for more than a year. Hilda Ramirez says they were fleeing the danger of their country and were caught by immigration authorities as they illegally crossed the border at Texas in 2014. After they were released from a holding facility, a pastor allowed them to live on church grounds.

The unease among immigrants has been building but intensified in recent weeks with ever-clearer signs that the Trump administration would jettison the Obama-era policy of focusing mostly on deporting those who had committed serious crimes.

The administration announced Tuesday that any immigrant in the country illegally who is charged with or convicted of any offence, or even suspected of a crime, will now be an enforcement priority. That could include people arrested for shoplifting or other minor offences, or those who simply crossed the border illegally.

IMMIGRATION

Trump, aides not eye to eye

Seeking to tamp down growing unease in Latin America, U.S. Homeland Security Secretary John Kelly pledged Thursday that America won't enlist its military to enforce immigration laws and that there will be "no mass deportations."

Only hours earlier, President Donald Trump suggested the opposite. He told CEOs at the White House the deportation push was a "military operation."

Kelly said all deportations will honour human rights and follow the U.S. legal system. He said that includes multiple appeals offered to those facing deportation. Kelly said the U.S. approach will involve "close coordination" with Mexico's government. "There will be no use of military forces in immigration," Kelly said. "There will be no mass deportations."

Yet while Kelly tried to alleviate Mexico's concerns, Trump was fanning them further with tough talk about "getting really bad dudes out of this country at a rate nobody has ever seen before." THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Residents return after flooding to assess damage in San Jose

Gloria Najar said it felt like an "apocalypse" when she returned home after being evacuated in a flood that sent waist-high water into homes and streets in San Jose, California.

Still, as she sorted through her water-logged possession Thursday, she said she counts herself among the lucky.

The 57-year-old - one of thousands of people ordered to evacuate Tuesday - lost almost everything in her garage but her second-floor condominium was dry.

About two-thirds of the 14,000 evacuated residents were being allowed to return home after Coyote Creek overflowed its banks then began to recede.

People who went home were warned to be careful about hygiene and handling food that may have come into contact with flood water.

"The water is not safe," Mayor

Sam Liccardo said.

Liccardo acknowledged Wednesday that the city failed to properly notify residents to evacuate and had to resort to going door-to-door in the middle of the night to order many people to leave.

Some people said they got their first notice by seeing firefighters in boats in the neighbourhood.

The city began alerting residents about flooding on Tuesday via social and mainstream media and sending emergency alerts to those who had signed up for it, a city spokesman said.

Officials sent firefighters late Tuesday to evacuate about 400 people from a low-lying residential area. City officials said they did not believe the waters would spread to other neighbourhoods and did not expand the evacuation orders.

Peele trades in laughs for fear

IN FOCUS

Comedies, horrors similar in ways, says debut director

Richard Crouse For Metro Canada

Get Out, his directorial debut, however, contains few laughs. By design. It's a horror film about college students Rose and Chris, played by Allison Williams and Daniel Kaluuya. Things are getting serious and it's time to meet the parents. "Do they know I'm black?" he asks. She assures him race is a non-issue as they head to her leafy up-state hometown to meet parents Missy and Dean (Catherine Keener and Bradley Whitford). After a few days Chris feels uneasy, a sensation compounded by an alarming call from his best friend. "I've been doing my research and a whole lot of brothers have gone missing in that suburb," he says. Chris wonders if his hosts are racist and deadly or just racist. "It's a horror movie from an African American's perspective," Peele told Forbes.com.

While working on the script Peele sought advice from Sean of the Dead director Edgar Wright and other genre filmmakers but says ultimately his career in comedy was the best training to make a horror film.

Making people laugh, he declares, and scaring the pants off them share a similar skill set. Both are all about pacing, reveals and both must feel like they take place in reality he says.

His love of horror dates back to watching A Nightmare on Elm Street as a teen. It was the first movie that really terrified him. Since then, he says the first sight of Hannibal Lecter in Silence of the Lambs really frightened him. "You come down the hallway, and he's just waiting for you," he told the New York Times. "It's the protagonist in motion and something waiting for him. patiently and calmly. Those are so chilling to me."

Get Out isn't a typical horror film, however. Peele refers to it as a "social thriller," a movie that veers away from the Nightmare on Elm Street thrills that made such an impression on him as a teen. Instead the main villain is something more insidious than even the slash-happy Freddy Kruger, it's racial tension. He says the story is personal but is quick to add it speedily veers off from anything strictly autobiographical. Instead it is an exploration of racism in all its forms he hopes will ultimately be relatable for his audience no matter who they are.

He compares Chris's anxiety to Sidney Poitier's classic Guess Who's Coming to Dinner. In that film parents, played by Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn, have their attitudes challenged when their daughter introduces them to her African American fiancé. He says the uncomfortable situation of meeting in-laws for the first time is universal. "The layer of race that enriches and complicates that tension (in the film) becomes relatable," he told GQ, "It's made to be an inclusive movie. If you don't go through the movie with the main character, I haven't done my job right."

Chris, played by Daniel Kaluuya, with girlfriend Rose, played by Allison Williams, are the protagonists in Get Out, "a horror movie from an African American's perspective." CONTRIBUTED

Peeling back a new layer on race

Jordan Peele is hoping that his horror debut is transformative

Sean Plummer For Metro Canada

He may be half of comedy duo Key & Peele, but Jordan Peele just made a horror movie.

Get Out, about a young black man meeting his white girlfriend's parents, is the biracial Peele's directorial debut, and, yes, it punches every hot button about race you can imagine.

Did your biracial background inform Get Out?

My being mixed, more than anything it offers me a perspective that a lot of people don't have, and it was a perspective that was very helpful for Keegan [Michael Key] and I when writing Key

The reality of being biracial is that in some ways you get to identify as black, in some ways people identify as white. In other ways you don't get to identify as either. So it's a perspective that really came in handy with Key & Peele, and I basically applied that aspect to horror. I think it's just something that has informed my point of view."

In the trailer, our hero Chris is warned about coming home "all bougie" (bourgeois) after visiting his girlfriend's parents.

This film actually addresses many social fears and realities about race. One of them is the fairly common fear - I know I have as an African-American — that I'll be perceived as a traitor in some way (by fellow African-Americans). That's just one of the many, very real things this movie deals with or ad-

How did you come to cast Daniel Kaluuya as Chris?

I had seen Daniel in Black Mirror and Sicario, and he's just a very special actor. He's extremely present, he is extremely likeable, and he came in and he absolutely crushed the audition. But he's a tour-de-force actor and a total lead.

How important do you feel it is for black audiences to see black heroes up on the movie screen?

It's enormously important.

And I think that's another piece of the conversation that's been missing is that we haven't had enough black protagonists, especially in genre films. And it's extremely important for black people to see protagonists

The point for me is not to make a movie that is for one segment of the population. Get Out is supposed to work for everybody. Jordan Peele that are black.

But (it's) also (important) for everyone else to go sit in a movie and identify with a protagonist that's black, see through the eyes of somebody who's viewing race in this way — in the way, for instance, that I view race. I think that it can be transformative.

Do you think about how white audiences are going to react?

I give it a lot of thought. The whole point for me is not to make a movie that is for one segment of the population. Get Out is supposed to work for everybody. And we've done a couple of screenings so far and there's really no difference to how white people view the movie and how black people view the movie. When people hear the premise, they may think there's a little bit more of a

But that's the beauty of story - if the story works, it doesn't matter who you are. You're sitting down in the theatre for that 90 minutes or two hours and you'll see the world through the eyes of the protagonist. If Get Out does what it is designed to do, it'll actually be a communal experience and conversation starter.

You have said your goal for this next part of your career is to write and direct horror movies. Is that still the case?

That is the case. I have several ideas [and] scripts that I'm working on. And, yeah, I hope to be part of a movement. I'm committed to horror-thriller.

Who'll be best of the very best?

It's supposed to be easy this year: La La Land dances away with gold. That's what the oddsmakers say. But, as ever, nothing can be taken for granted on Oscars night. Here are our picks...

PETER HOWELL/TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

BEST PICTURE

Will: La La Land or Moonlight

Could: Hidden Figures Should: Moonlight

Why: The safe money is supposedly on La La Land to win, but I consider this category too close to call. Moonlight's unique coming-of-age story has so much resonance to modern times, I'm thinking hoping - that the Academy will go for it. And Hidden Figures just might surprise everybody, much like Spotlight did last year.

BEST DIRECTOR

Will: Barry Jenkins (Moonlight) or Damien Chazelle, (La La Land)

Could: Denis Villeneuve (Arrival)

Should: Barry Jenkins Why: If voters go La La Land for best picture, then I think they'll choose Jenkins for best director, which would significantly make him the first African-American director to win this honour. And if they choose Moonlight for Best Picture, then Chazelle for Best Director.

BEST ACTRESS

Will: Emma Stone (La La Land) Could: Natalie Portman (Jackie) or Isabelle Huppert (Elle)

Should: Natalie Portman (Jackie)

Why: Front-runner Stone is all set to be the belle of the Oscars with her enchanting performance. But the inner fortitude Portman displayed as the widowed Jacqueline Kennedy impressed me more. Huppert is long overdue for an Oscar and a win is possible and deserved.

BEST ACTOR

Will: Casey Affleck (Manchester by the Sea) Could: Denzel Washington (Fences)

Should: Casey Affleck (Manchester by the Sea) Why: Affleck and Washington each play tortured souls in their respective roles of defeated family men. Affleck's performance was bone deep and truly memorable; Washington's was solid yet showy. But Denzel is a two-time Oscar champ and he won at SAG this year.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTRESS

Will: Viola Davis (Fences) Could: Michelle Williams (Manchester by the Sea) Should: Naomie Harris (Moonlight)

Why: This is the easiest Oscar to call and the toughest to endorse. Davis will win for her tremendous performance, although it's arguably category fraud: she really should be up for best actress. Williams defines strong support with her brief Manchester scenes. But Harris exceeds all stereotypes with her moving portrayal.

BEST SUPPORTING ACTOR

Will: Mahershala Ali (Moonlight)

Could: Jeff Bridges (Hell or High Water)

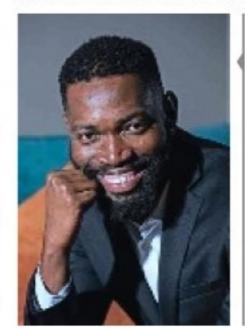

Should: Mahershala Ali Why: Ali has been the obvious choice here ever since he first wowed audiences at TIFF and other fall festivals with his deeply affecting and stereotype-busting portrayal of a fatherly drug dealer. It will be a huge upset if he loses but if he does, the prize would likely go to Jeff Bridges for his wily lawman character.

BEST ORIGINAL SCREENPLAY

Will: Manchester by the Sea Could: La La Land Should: Manchester by the Sea

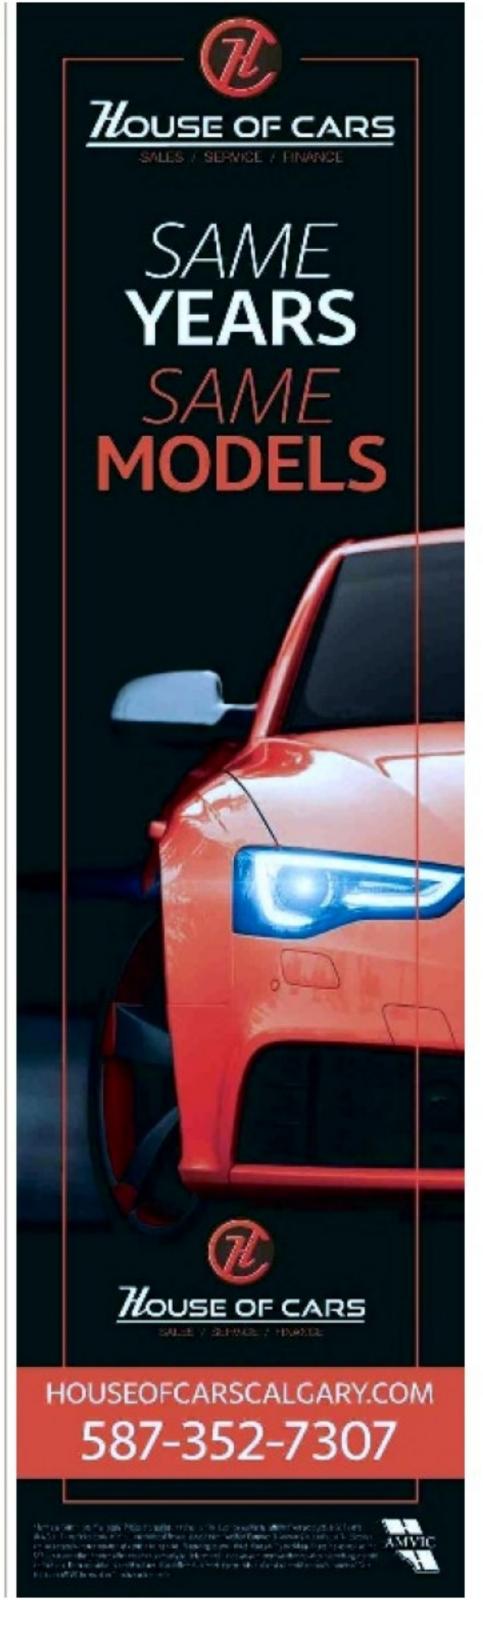

Why: Voters often bestow this as a consolation prize to films they aren't choosing for best picture, so Manchester by the Sea may win for that reason. More than this, though, writer/ director Kenneth Lonergan truly deserves recognition for finding a beating heart within the depths of tragedy and despair, and also some welcome notes of comedy.

BEST ADAPTED SCREENPLAY

Will: Moonlight Could: Arrival Should: Moonlight Why: How do you find poetry in a crime-infested and crackridden Miami neighbourhood? Writer/director Barry Jenkins shows how with Moonlight, which he adapted from an unproduced play by Tarell Alvin McCraney. It would be no shame if Eric Heisserer's impactful adaption of Ted Chiang's cerebral short story for Story of Your Life took the prize for Arrival.

Race, through James Baldwin's eyes

I Am Not Your Negro explores race in America

One might regard filmmaker Raoul Peck's documentary as a case of unfinished business.

Back in 1979, acclaimed author James Baldwin wrote to his literary agent about a plan to write a book linking the lives of three towering figures of the 1960s civil rights movement: Medgar Evers, Malcolm X and Martin Luther King Ir.

All three were assassinated, and as noted by Baldwin, never lived to see the age of 40.

Baldwin's manuscript never got past 30 pages, so Peck, with the full co-operation of the late writer's estate, uses his perspective as a filmmaker to reimagine and broaden the scope of the project.

The result — hard-hitting and insightful - is a reminder that the more things

Peck's film is 'revelatory'

Aisha Karefa-Smart, Baldwin's niece, says Peck's film, which includes excerpts from the FBI's extensive file on Baldwin, was revelatory.

"It made me understand my family more in terms of the hushed tones that people spoke in and the unspoken fears that permeated the household." At festival screenings, she has watched the film help resurrect her uncle. Baldwin is widely taught in universities.

The Library of America has published his essays, and stories with introductions from Toni Morrison. The James Baldwin Re-

When Chris Rock spoke at a Harlem church on Martin Luther King Day last year, he read My Dungeon Shook, Baldwin's letter to his nephew. What many respond to in Baldwin is his searing directness, his willingness to confront the deepseated ills of America and to reposition questions of race. "The country's image of present day. We're reminded of the historic civil rights protests throughout the U.S. South in the 1950s and 1960s and the raw hatred and ugliness they exposed. That's juxtaposed with the 2014 killing of Michael Brown in Ferguson, Missouri by a police officer, which reignited the rage of the black community.

There are also photos to remind us of other recent examples of the ongoing violence faced by African-Americans, especially young people like Trayvon Martin, who died in 2012 at the hands of a self-appointed vigilante who was later acquitted of murder by a jury in Florida.

We also learn a good deal about the life of Baldwin himself, a fascinating figure who fled to Europe in 1948 only to return to take up a burden that his race had placed upon him. The FBI took note in 1966, labelling Baldwin both a homosexual and a "dangerous individual."

Throughout the film, we hear Baldwin's own eloquent and sorrowful analysis of the race issue that America continues to grapple with. It's a painful reminder of why groups like Black Lives Matter still matter.

Barish's 'luck' takes him to brink of Oscar glory

INTERVIEW

Collaborations with DuVernay alter course of producer's path

Callaghan Metro Canada

These are sweet times for Howard Barish. More than three decades after turning away from his family's iconic ice cream empire to pursue his storytelling dreams, Barish will hear his name read out at the 89th Academy Awards Sunday night.

Hearing it read out a second time as winner would be the cherry on top. But the Canadian producer - nominated for best documentary alongside director Ava DuVernay for 13TH, their searing exploration of race and incarceration in the U.S. is not getting greedy. It's not in his nature.

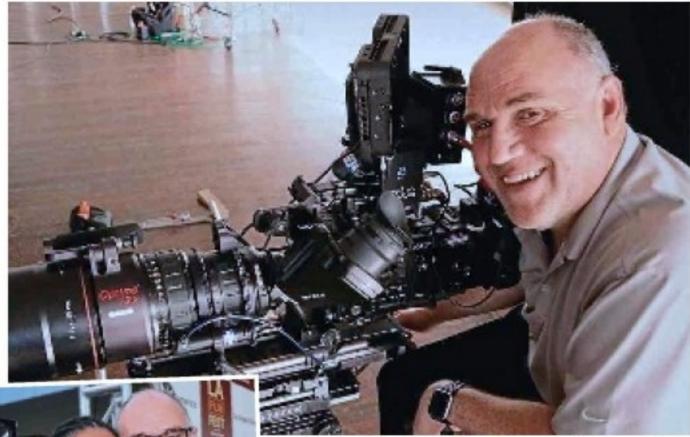

"I don't know if I'd say I'm nervous as much as I'm excited," Barish tells Metro.

"I've been in the industry a long time and got to do a lot of interesting work but it's just really, really nice to make it to this level. Not many people get to this point."

Barish's journey has been a meandering one. The 57-year-old describes it as "a very, very lucky life with a lot of hard work" thrown in. He wasn't yet in his teens when his family took Dickie Dee's, their ice cream vending business with its trademark tricycles, from Winnipeg to Toronto in 1971. It was there where his filmmaking fires were lit.

"My dad had a Super 8 camera that I fell in love with," he says. "I grew up in Thornhill, and Thornhill Secondary School was associated with the local cable access company and they opened up the studios to students in the neighbourhood to produce a television show.

"We had a show called Friday Night Live...this is years

Canadian producer Howard Barish credits director and friend Ava DuVernay as his inspiration in setting up a film fund for first-time directors. CONTRIBUTED/GETTY IMAGES before Saturday Night Live, years before MTV. And we had four hours of live airtime to fill where we spun records, had the drama club put on shows, did talkshows, did call-in stuff...did whatever the heck we could."

Pastime became passion in York University's film program and after graduation Barish put in 20-hour days sweeping floors and driving vans to get his foot in the door. He would cut his teeth as an assistant director at CBC shows before making the move to the U.S. after winning a spot in the green card lottery. Lucky life, remember.

The most significant stroke of luck, however, may have come eight years ago when a publicist with stories she desperately wanted to tell moved into an office in the same building as Barish's Kandoo Films in L.A.

DuVernay is nothing short of a filmmaking revelation. She first got behind the lens in 2008, yet 13TH's nomination is her second in the space of three years after Selma's best picture nod in 2014.

"(Kandoo) was a TV and film marketing and advertising (firm)," Barish explains. "Once Ava realized that there was this sandbox of toys in the building, it didn't take her long to come down and say 'hey I wrote a script that I want to direct, do you want to help me produce it? My initial reaction was 'no. I don't even know you'. But it didn't take long to realize that she's an incredibly intelligent, articulate woman and first and foremost incredibly passionate."

Success was swift. The first of their seven collaborations was 2010's I Will Follow before Middle of Nowhere wowed Sundance in 2012.

"It had a profound effect on me as I watched this new filmmaker really come to light and explode," says Barish. "I started to change the projection of my own career, completely. My business when I met Ava (was) network promos and image campaigns. I have changed that focus and Kandoo Films has now gone out and created a film fund that is going to back emerging filmmakers, give new voices an opportunity to tell stories where ordinarily they might not have got that shot.'

It's unlikely any story will be as important as the one told so toweringly in 13TH. In deeply unsettling times, the Netflix collaboration has struck a major chord. While it was fully three years in the making, 13TH was released in October as Donald Trump's ascent to authoritarian power gathered pace on the back of a corrosive, divisive outlook.

13TH's greatest achievement is how it encapsulates the breadth of America's history of exploitation and incarceration and rams home the present-day implications with clean precision.

"The statistics to me were horrifying," Barish says of the prison figures presented throughout. "As I (became) a spokesperson in my little circle for this, people were looking at me like 'that can't be true, that can't be true'. That was when I was thinking 'Oh my god, there's information here that we're going to be sharing that is going to find an audience'. These voices should have come to light a long, long time ago."

CANADIANS IN OSCARS HUNT

Gosling at head of queue

Howard Barish will be far from alone on Sunday night as an impressive swell of Canadian nominees flood into the Dolby Theatre. The 89th Academy Awards feature a host of contenders from north of the border.

Denis Villeneuve's Arrival is in the running for eight Oscars including best picture with its Canadian crew nominated in design and sound categories.

Ryan Gosling and La La Land outpaced Arrival with a record-equalling 14 nominations, the Ontario leading man eyeing a best actor award. Canada's animation revolution is laid bare in the best animated short category where three of the five nominees - Blind Vaysha, Pear

Cider and Cigarettes and Piper - have strong Canadian ties.

"Good talent can thrive anywhere," Barish says. "I got involved in the Canadian film industry when the Americans were first coming up and for me it provided a great training ground." JOE CALLAGHAN/METRO

No end to Monae's hidden talents

Movie rookie is one of biggest surprises of Oscar season

The journey from pop star to serious thespian is littered with casualties. For every Mark Wahlberg or Justin Timberlake, there are big-name hitmakers whose movie careers stalled with dubious and disappointing results.

Which is just one reason why Janelle Monae's magical movie ride is so noteworthy. The Grammy-nominated performer made her acting debut last year with two films - and both are nominated for best picture at Sunday's Academy Awards.

She first wowed critics in her small but pivotal role in Moonlight as Teresa, the nurturing girlfriend of a drug dealer who befriends an introverted, impoverished boy who senses he is different.

But her biggest breakout would come with Hidden Figures, portraying one of three pioneering black women at NASA whose contributions to the space race were critical, but overlooked by history. As engineer Mary Jackson, Monae shows a depth and range that wowed critics and proved she could hold her own along a star-studded cast.

Though Monae may be one of the biggest surprises of the Oscar season, the 31-year-old sees her acting ascension as part of her natural progression as an artist (she studied acting for years).

"I always did both, and I consider myself not just an actor or a musician or singer, but an artist-storyteller, and my hope is to continue to tell untold, unique universal stories in unforgettable ways," said Monae.

Monae's career so far has certainly been unforgettable. Her albums - a captivating mix of funk, psychedelic soul, R&B and pop - have been critically lauded, and her electric stage presence recalls James Brown or Prince, who was a close friend and mentor. She's a CoverGirl spokeswoman and a fashion muse known for her eclectic style: On this day, her hair was dotted with eve ornaments.

Space permeated Monae's artistic world long before Hidden Figures - her alter ego was a futuristic android Cindi Mayweather, and on her last album, she paid tribute to Sally Ride, the first American woman to travel in space. She even dreamed of being an astronaut.

"I've been obsessed with space and sci-fi . I was obsessed and still am with Mae Jemison," she said of the first black woman in space. And yet Monae was unaware of the story of Jackson or the other central characters in Hidden Figures.

Jackson was one of the black female "human computers" working for NASA in the segregated South; while the main character, Katherine Johnson (played by Taraji P. Henson) was responsible for the mathematical formula that launched John Glenn into orbit, Jackson petitioned and won her case to study engineering at an all-white school to further her career at NASA.

"I thought it was a fictitious story," she said. "Once I found out that these women in fact did exist, and they did contribute to the space race and were an integral part of helping us win the space race, I wanted to make sure that no other young boy or girl or American, human being, went through life without knowing these phenomenal. brilliant-minded women."

Monae was cast as Jackson after the Oscar-nominated Henson and Oscar-winner Octavia Spencer (up for another Oscar for her portrayal of Dorothy Vaughan) were on board.

"We auditioned everyone, and we were having a hard time finding someone who had the fire of Mary Jackson," said director Theodore Melfi. "Then in walks Janelle and I think she was burning up inside herself. She's such an activist and such a passionate and strong woman."

Monae's advocacy also spills outside her art. She was one of the performers at the Women's March in Washington a month ago, and has been outspoken in her support of gay rights, Black Lives Matter and other causes.

Her next project could be her own script: Monae envisions science fiction movies where black people play the leads, and stories about other hidden figures in African-American history.

"I feel empowered to continue writing and telling the stories that I feel we so desperately need," she said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Oscars so black, but there's work to be done

MOVIES

Oscar noms spotlighted best movies, not race

After two years of intense public scrutiny over the academy's allwhite acting nominations, the 2017 Oscar nominees are as diverse a group as the organization has ever seen, thanks to films like Moonlight, Fences, Hidden Figures and Loving.

It's been cause for celebration, but also for reflection and heightened scrutiny of areas where there is still work to be done. And there are some in the industry who wonder whether the rich diversity of this year's Oscars is a blip, a sign of progress, or some complicated combination of the two. Then there's the matter of who will ultimately win on Sunday night.

The landmark nominations are undeniable, especially in the acting categories. It's the first time ever that each has at least one black nominee. Denzel Washington (Fences) is up for best actor, Mahershala Ali (Moonlight) for best supporting actor, Ruth Negga (Loving) is a best actress contender, and, in another first, the best supporting actress category includes three black nominees (Naomie Harris, Viola Davis, Octavia Spencer).

There were strides made behind the camera as well. Bradford Young became the first African American to be nominated for cinematography for Arrival. Moonlight editor Joi McMillon is the first black female nominee in that category. It's the second time a black female producer has been nominated for best picture (Kimberly Steward for Manchester by the Sea) and the first time that three films with black producers were nominated for best picture (including Washington for Fences and Pharrell Williams for Hidden Figures). There are also four black directors whose documentaries were nominated, three of which are about race.

It might lead one to think that #OscarsSoWhite is a thing of the past — eradicated through public outcries and an Academy of Motion Picture Arts and Sciences membership shake-up in which 683 new faces were invited to join with an emphasis on diversity.

In reality, however, the nominations are the result of a messy confluence of factors that don't lend themselves to a simple narrative — not to mention the fact

April Reign originally coined #OscarsSoWhite. GETTY IMAGES

The diversity of the nominees is 100 per cent a function of the films that were released this year.

David Poland, MovieCityNews.com

that diversity doesn't end with black and white.

"One year does not make up for over 80 years of a lack of representation of black people in the film industry," Reign said.

She never intended #OscarsSoWhite to just be about black nominees, either, or even race. Instead, it was meant to shine a light on all underrepresented communities in films.

And while much has been made of the breadth of the academy's efforts, David Poland, editor of MovieCityNews.com, has estimated that in the end. there were fewer than 50 new black members and just over 30 new female members inducted. (The academy does release specific information about membership.) He and others have questioned the idea that this year's nominations are a result of those changes.

"The diversity of the nominees is 100 per cent a function of the films that were released this year," Poland said. "It is wonderful that these films were recognized this season . but not because they were 'of colour,' but because they are excellent movies ... It is, in reality, insulting to the films that are about or made by people of colour that they will get in or have gotten in based on the issue of race."

Conflating the protest with the accolades is a double edged sword for many, especially those involved in the films. It's one AWARD WATCH

Awards still lagging for women, other minorities

This year's nominations were a banner year for black nominees, but other nonwhite groups and women were largely left out of the running. This year, the sole non-black acting nominee of colour was British-Indian actor Dev Patel for his performance in Lion. The last time an Asian woman was nominated was in 1935. Behind the camera, no Mexican filmmakers have been nominated. La La Land's Ai-ling Lee became the first Asian sound editing nominee. But, overall representation of women in Oscar-nominated behindthe-scenes categories fell two per cent, according to a recent report from the Women's Media Center.

thing to recognize correlation. It's another to assume causation.

"I'm hoping it's not a trend," Viola Davis said. "I'm hoping it's not something based on a hashtag. It is something based on the natural fabric of what America is and what America now wants to see."

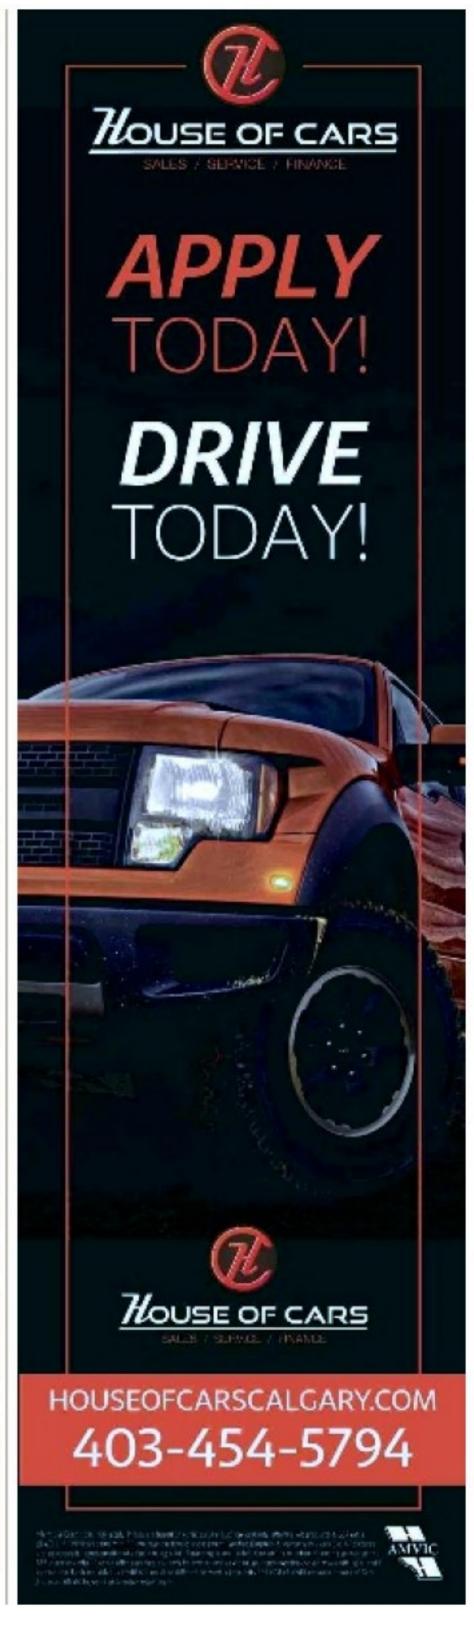

Also, as nominated "Moonlight" director Barry Jenkins points out, many of the films responsible for the diversity this year were in the works before OscarsSoWhite.

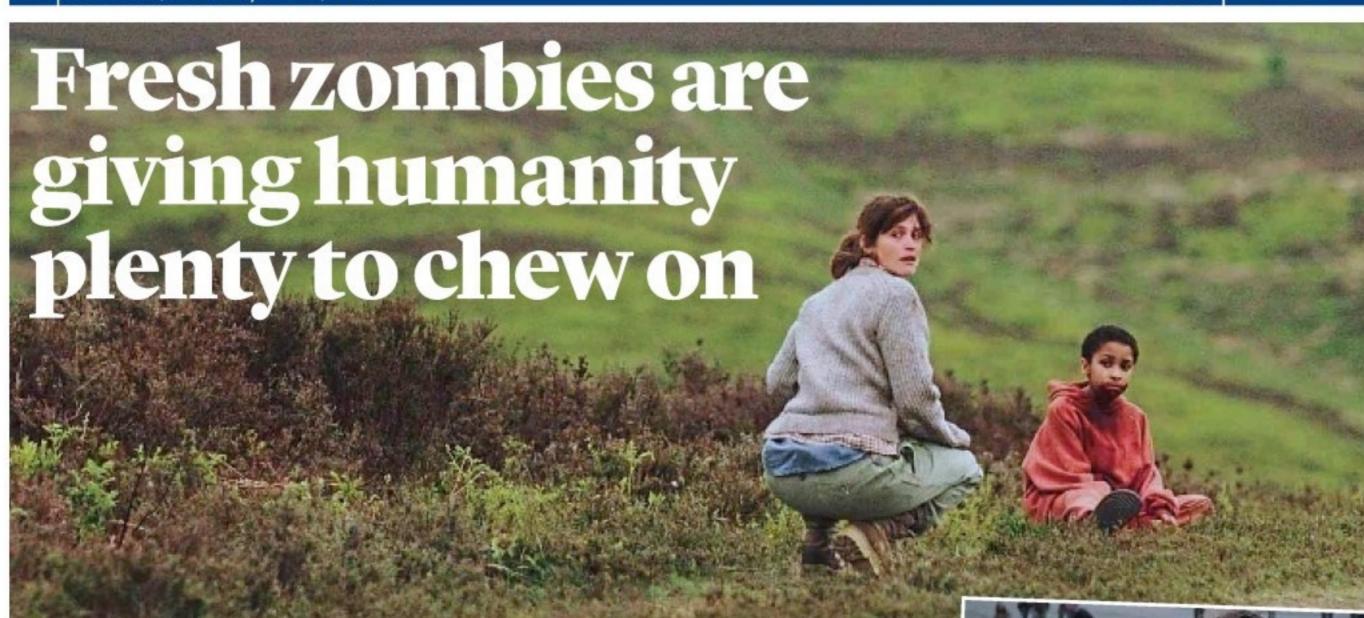

"Most of these films started a few years ago - four years ago, five years ago - not as a response to what happened last year, but as a response to the lack of these voices," Jenkins said. "I have no doubt that next year we'll be here this time of year and it'll be the same thing ... we're not going away."

To be fair, Reign, too, doesn't believe that anyone was nominated because of a hashtag. or that any of the films were made in response. Ultimately what the hashtag did, like all effective protest movements, is raise awareness and consciousness around representation and, possibly, the films.

But the Oscars litmus test is a shallow one for some. Oscar nominations (and even wins) are simply a last stage reflection of the industry at large and what films actually get made and put into the marketplace. It's telling that most of the best picture nominees started as independent films.

living counterparts and, these days, an almost unrivalled popularity with horror fans.

It seems when the world is in turmoil people turn to zombies as an outlet for their apocalyptic anxieties. A new British film, The Girl With All the Gifts, borrows from Romero, 28 Days Later and even from The Walking Dead and yet its mix of social commentary, zippy zombies and exploding skulls doesn't feel like a re-tread.

"The zombie metaphor is humanity eating itself," says star Gemma Arterton. "This film extends that because it gives zombies, or hungries as we call them, intelligence, empathy, love and the ability to fend for themselves in a more developed way.

"I think we are in a period of time right now where there is major despair out there about what is happening. This film is poignant now, coming out now post Brexit. It feels quite relevant."

Arterton plays Helen Justineau, teacher of a group of children infected by a zombifying disease but still capable of advanced thought. In the search for a cure these kids are studied at a remote English army base.

Helen has bonded with one remarkable child, Melanie (Sennia Nanua), a youngster as lethal as the others but possessed of superior intelligence and charm. When the base is overrun by "hungries" Helen, Melanie and two others escape but not before the child shows her true colours.

"I did something bad," she says. "I ate bits of the soldiers." With the help of the worldweary Sgt. Eddie Parks (Paddy Considine) they make their way to London.

"If you talk to Mike Carey who wrote the book and the screenplay," says Arterton, who broke out as an MI6 field agent in 2008's Bond hit Quantum of Solace, "you'll find he's not only a great raconteur but he really knows what's going on with science and politics and he mixes the two together. It is such interesting conversation. He's obviously a big geek but in a really factual way."

A case in point, Arterton says, is the virus that lies at the centre of the film.

"The disease, the fungal infection is actually something that exists. There is a colony of ants in South America that have Ophiocordyceps unilateralis," she explains, diving into the science. "It's a fungal infection that infects them from the inside and then they sprout and turn into a different type of ant. Then those ants will eat the other ants to survive.

"These things happen in nature. Nature is such a strong force. I love that in this film you can see nature taking back the planet.

"We actually used some shots from Chornobyl as the London skyline because Chornobyl is this abandoned city that is completely overgrown now. We might die, but nature will be fine. The world is going to keep going without us."

Helmed by Scottish director Colm McCarthy in his first feature-length production, The Girl with All the Gifts asks difficult questions about the price of survival, capping off the story with chilling words that may — or may not alleviate lingering zombie phobia.

"It's not all over," says Melanie, "it's just not yours anymore."

Canadians ask actors not to spoil moment with their views

Maybe we'd just like the Oscars to be a little shorter.

As Canadians prepare to tune in to the cultural stalwart that manages to bore and entertain in equal measures, a new poll shows that just over half of us would like award recipients to resist the temptation to make political statements.

The online survey conducted by Angus Reid Institute shows that while 61 per cent of Canadians think it's OK for celebrities and athletes to publicly express their political views, 55 per cent said they oppose using awards show for that purpose.

"There is support for people in the public eye using their activism ... on social media or in the protest movement," said Shachi Kurl, executive director of the Angus Reid Institute.

"But when it comes to the moment, whether it's picking up an award that's related to the arts or entertainment community, or moments when all eyes are on athletes at big games, clearly there is a distinction in the minds of our respondents that say in that moment make it about that moment."

FESTIVALS

The Toronto International Film Festival says it remains committed to art-house and international cinema as it cuts two programs that featured such fare and reduces the overall number of titles it will screen for this year's edition by 20 per cent.

On Thursday, TIFF announced it will trim the overall number of films in the 2017 lineup and scrap the Vanguard and City to City sections.

The Vanguard program featured "dark and edgy films that twist genre and art house conventions together in a new way." City to City showcased filmmakers living and working in a selected city, regardless of where their films are set.

"We're committed to arthouse cinema, we're committed to international film, we're a global film festival. We have programmers who are looking for movies all over the world. That will continue." Cameron Bailey, artistic director of TIFF, said from Los Angeles.

"The trims will be for the most part across the board but we are definitely committed to maintaining a very strong international lineup. That's one of the main things our audience comes to us for, so that will continue."

Bailey said with Vanguard, organizers found there was overlap between the films that were in that section and those in Special Presentations and Midnight

"We just wanted to be a bit clearer about the identity of the sections," he said.

City to City has featured filmmakers from cities including Tel Aviv, Istanbul and Lagos, Nigeria.

"Now I think it's time to integrate that programming into the festival as a whole," said Bailey.

The festival spent a long time thinking through and mapping out the changes, which are in response to feedback from audiences, the industry and the media, he added.

"What we've heard is that people love the selection but it can be overwhelming, if you're trying to do the festival fully, especially as a working professional," Bailey said. "It's really hard to cover everything that we have and we thought we can find a way to bring a tighter curation to the festival, to really go after the films we love the most and to make it a little bit easier to navigate."

TIFF also announced it's cutting two venues from its festival - the Hot Docs Ted Rogers Cinema and the Isabel Bader Theatre. Bailey said the move will bring things closer to the area around the festival's main downtown hub, the TIFF Bell Lightbox. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Six-minute vid dissects her hurt and his cheating ways

What does a truly nasty breakup get you? Internet fame, for some, or is it more like notoriety?

It's a little bit of both for Kourtney Jorge and Leonard Long III, 23-year-old exes who sat for an on-camera interview in a video that went viral after the Conde Nast Entertainment site The Scene dropped it on Valentine's Day.

The edited six minutes and 30 seconds of their hour-and-a-half standoff had the two dissecting HIS cheating ways and HER tearful willingness to hang on and wait, patiently, for an apology that eventually comes.

mer couples wounded by cheating as the first in an original series titled Broken.

Jorge and Long, who were college sweethearts and best friends, and whose last names were not used in the video, were heavily vetted before filming, Lumsden said. Both were paid "nominal appearance fees" as the first in the planned series of six episodes, Lumsden said, but she and Jorge herself vehemently denied that any scripting went on.

"I couldn't have made that up if I tried," Jorge laughed.

To put it succinctly, Lumsden summed up the phenom: "It's been insane."

The Scene put Jorge and Long on a stark set, facing each other in director's chairs with sappy background music on point and captioning that serves to emphasize the juiciest stuff. Jorge, who took the lead in contacting the site, and Long, whom she dated for nearly four years, were filmed back in November, just after they had started one in a series of "breaks" in their up-and-down relationship.

On camera, a soft-spoken Jorge asks him why he cheated: "What did you do?" To which Long responds: "I had sex with other girls. I did everything."

Jorge, an aspiring model and actress with a day job as an office assistant, said in the video that she knew of his infidelities after going through his phone, stumbling on photos and texts from other women. One time, she caught him with another woman in his room and he told Jorge to leave.

Long, on the other hand, explained his behaviour this way in the video: "It had more to do with me just not being able to commit because at the time I really didn't want to. ... You did everything that you needed to do to be a good girlfriend and I was lucky to have someone like you."

Before Hurt Bae, The Scene had few takers who passed vetting for its "Broken" series. Since, Lumsden said she's sitting on 500 emails of couples willing to come forward.

The Scene would like to follow up with another "Hurt Bae" video, but had no commitment from Long at this writing. Jorge said she would be interested and thinks Long might be, too. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Eggold readies for Blacklist spinoff

Ryan Eggold stars as Tom Keen in The Blacklist: Redemption. NBC VIA ASSOCIATED PRESS

TELEVISION

Supporting character takes lead in Redemption

Ryan Eggold is ready for more action in NBC's The Blacklist: Redemption.

Eggold's character, Tom Keen, grew into a key part of mothership The Blacklist. Now Tom and Famke Janssen's Susan "Scottie" Hargrave are front and centre in Redemption, two people with dark pasts who are intent on righting wrongs, not committing them.

Or so we are told as Redemption begins an eight-episode run 10 p.m. EST Thursday. But as The Blacklist viewers know, and Eggold helpfully points out, appearances can be deceiving in the complicated world of Keen, his wife and FBI profiler Liz (Megan Boone), and puppet master Raymond "Red" Reddington (James Spader).

A primer for the spinoff: Tom believes that Scottie, head of a covert mercenary group, is the mother he never knew.

Scottie thinks her son died as a child. But there's more than that to untangle, Eggold said, with "varying conspiracy theories" pitted against each other.

Edi Gathegi reprises his Blacklist role as slickly dangerous Matias Solomon.

Also on hand is Terry O'Quinn, the Lost star who knows something about complicated plot lines. What Eggold can offer is that that the series plays, non-politically, off of headlines about refugees, Edward Snowden-type figures, cyberwarfare and Russia. And it has a touch of Ocean's Eleven camaraderie and humour, he promises. He had more to say in a phone interview with The Associated Press from New York, where the series films.

Taking Tom to a lead character in "Redemption" must be a welcome change.

Acting-wise, I feel like I'm almost drawn to supporting characters in a way. If it's going to be the lead, I'm glad it's this character because he's so multi-faceted and almost contradictory. ... He's a spy, and he's an assassin and he's a con man. And now he's a husband, and a father, and an orphan, and trying to be a good father. And he's learning how to be a good person after years of killing people in the middle of the jungle somewhere for some sum of

Why do supporting roles appeal to you?

The hero is burdened with the responsibility of doing the right thing. The fun of this character is he was sort of an ancillary character who grew into himself, and we're now doing this show around him. It's a character I was excited to explore more and peel back the layers.

Tom has embraced becoming a husband to Liz and dad to their baby, Agnes. How do you remain in their lives and on Blacklist as well as star in Redemp-

In these first eight episodes, the goal is to launch a new story and a new world and a new cast of characters. That's the focus. And then Tom's relationship with Liz and Agnes becomes something we'll deal with if we're going to continue with more episodes. ... In the launching of the show, Liz gives him her blessing to pursue this mission and get at the truth of who he is, where he comes from, why he was orphaned, what really happened to him and led him to be where he is today.

Janssen's Scottie looks very young to be Tom's mother, and there are hints she regards him in definitely non-maternal ways. How is that to play?

As an actor it's very fun, because it's so ambiguous and strange and awkward and uncomfortable - but also perhaps alluring. Then, of course, there's the uncertainty that she is his mother. He's been told that, and that's the truth he's going on. But you know that's what The Blacklist does: The ground is always shifting beneath your feet and we're always putting more pieces of the puzzle into place that shift the picture. Standen takes own route from Holywood to Hollywood North

TAKEN

Actor trades in his sword for a suit and tie in Toronto

It's a long way from Holywood to Hollywood North. Just ask Clive Standen.

The 35-year-old actor was born in Holywood, Northern Ireland, and for the past four seasons has starred as Rollo in History Channel's Canada-Ireland co-production Vikings.

"After doing the 50 hours we've filmed so far I feel like I've become a useless almanac of Viking knowledge," said the London Academy of Music and Dramatic Art grad. "I'd be the best person to have on your team if you're doing a Vikings pub quiz."

Vikings shoots in Ireland. Looking for new worlds to conquer, Standen traded in his swords for a suit and tie in Toronto as the lead on the new action drama Taken, which premieres Monday on NBC and Global.

Standen stars as former Green Beret Bryan Mills, a younger version of the character Liam Neeson played in the Taken movies. A personal tragedy drives Mills into a career as a deadly CIA operative. Jennifer Beals plays Mills's intelligence agency boss. French writer-director Luc Besson, who created the film trilogy, stays involved as an executive producer.

Jennifer Beals and Clive Standen star in the TV remake of Taken, airing on Global. GETTY IMAGES

The role calls for Standen to adopt an American accent, a skill he's a little rusty at, he admitted. Helping was growing up "on a steady diet of American films."

Speaking in Pasadena, Calif., at the Taken press launch last month, Standen said he nearly missed out on the series.

"It's full of car chases and explosions," he recalled saying as he ignored the script he was sent. "It's not really my cup of

That's a shame, said his agent, who mentioned the pilot was written by Alexander Cary, a Gulf War veteran and later a writer and producer on Home-

Standen immediately excused himself, went home, and read the script.

"It was phenomenal," he said. "What I find interesting about Bryan Mills is he's not like any other action hero."

What Standen likes about Mills is that he is more Clark Kent than Superman.

"You want him to succeed. and when he trips and fails and falls down, you want him to get back up."

He becomes more of a Superman later in life, in the Taken film trilogy.

Everything looked like it was made of glass. It was the most beautiful thing I'd ever seen.

Clive Standen on filming in the snow and freezing rain in Toronto

"I've got no interest in playing Liam Neeson's character in the film," said Standen. "He's the finished product. He's this man with a particular set of skills. This is about how he acquires them, and I think it's going to be a roller coaster of a ride with lots of ebbs and flows and twists and turns."

Shooting in and around Toronto this winter was challenging at times, said Standen, especially one night shoot in Orangeville, north of Toronto, during an ice storm.

"We had a big helicopter stunt the first day and they couldn't even get the helicopter up because the propellers were freezing."

Standen said the ice felt like "sharp rain in the face." He envied the crew "all warm in their parkas." THE CANADIAN PRESS

Spin-off says sorry for using Kenyan attack film

The executive producers of the new Fox series 24: Legacy are apologizing for using footage from a real terror attack at a Kenya mall that killed 67 people.

A statement Thursday from Evan Katz and Manny Coto says "we regretfully included news footage of an attack in Nairobi. It will be removed from all future broadcasts and versions of the show."

The footage from the September, 2013, attack on Westgate mall was used to depict a fictional terror attack in Egypt in the television show's fourth episode which aired on Monday night.

The statement continued to say the producers "apologize for any pain caused to the victims and their families and are deeply sorry."

It was not immediately clear how the footage of the Kenya attack was obtained. The series debuted earlier this month as a spin-off to the hit original helmed by Kiefer Sutherland. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

The co-hosts of the Brit Awards paid tribute to Michael Bublé on Wednesday night after the Canadian crooner was unable to host the ceremony as planned due to his son's illness.

Bublé cancelled his hosting gig last month to focus on caring for his three-year-old son, Noah, who is fighting cancer.

Dermot O'Leary and Emma Willis began the night by sending the 41-year-old Canadian their best wishes.

Dermot said he and Willis were honoured to host the awards, but would rather be watching Bublé on stage hosting the show.

Willis said everyone at the Brits sends Buble their love and have their fingers crossed that they will "see him again next year."

Dermot said both he and Willis were filling in with "heavy hearts" and under difficult circumstances, but were determined to do their best.

It was announced last October that Buble would headline the Brit Awards, but the following month that he revealed on Facebook that his son had been diagnosed with cancer.

Cohen's son releases new video of singer

A new music video assembled by Leonard Cohen's son and another longtime collaborator is giving fans an intimate glimpse of the late singer.

Traveling Light, directed by Sammy Slabbinck, was posted online Thursday and offers an array of archival and previously unseen footage.

Its opening scene features Cohen sitting on a porch reflecting on his health.

"I feel a lot stronger, but I'm actually a lot weaker," he says to the interviewer while smoking a cigarette.

"I wake up in my bed and I feel like, 'That's how I used to feel.' Not exactly but, you know. And then I swing my legs off the bed and I try to stand up."

Archival moments and some more recent footage of the poet and composer run throughout the rest of the lyric video. The project was compiled by Slabbinck, who designed the cover of Cohen's 2016 album You Want It Darker.

THICKE ACCUSED OF TAMPERING

Custody dispute rolls on

Robin Thicke's ex-wife is accusing the singer of tampering with a court order in an attempt to get her arrested in their bitter custody dispute. The allegations are made by Paula Patton's attorneys in a court filing released Thursday.

They came a day before a judge is scheduled to begin a hearing on the actress' allegations Thicke was abusive during their marriage and toward their 6-year-old son. In late January, a judge issued a temporary restraining order requiring Thicke to stay away from Patton and to have only supervised visits with their son.

Thicke has denied he has abused his son and his former attorney has said there was no basis for Patton's domestic violence allegations and called them retaliatory. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

THE MOMENT: The "right" side

After a merger, Diane Lockhart (Christine Baranski) is a named partner in "the largest civil litigator in the Midwest." Her goddaughter Maia (Rose Leslie), a new hire at her firm, takes notes on a police brutality case. Diane, though famously liberal, represents the cops.

"Are we on the right side on this one?" Maia asks Diane.

"We are on a necessary side." Diane replies. "You don't go on instinct. You wait, listen, watch. Eventually everyone reveals themselves. People I thought with all my heart were guilty turned out to be innocent and people I thought were saints, weren't."

The Good Fight is, of course, a spinoff of The Good Wife, and the creators of both, Robert and Michelle King. have never shied away from choosing a side. (Hence that word "good.") This series begins about a year after Diane slapped Alicia, and its opening scene is Diane watching Donald Trump's inauguration with her mouth open in disbelief. So, immediately, we know where she stands.

But Trump's taking office turns out to be a great metaphor for this series, which likely was conceived when Hillary Clinton seemed destined for the U.S. presidency. Now, Diane represents everyone who believed she was on the "right" side (not just politically, but also in her personal and work life) and found, to her dismay, that "right" has been redefined.

By the end, she's stripped bare and starting over, at a firm owned by African Americans, which will further test her belief that her fights, and she herself, are "good."

Johanna Schneller is a media connoisseur who zeroes in on pop-culture moments. She appears Monday through Thursday.

Prada channelling the protest era

MILAN FASHION WEEK

Designer can't quite keep politics out of Milan showcase

Red accents are lighting up the Milan runway, from blood red ensembles to red contrasts in footwear or a simple stripe of colour. But not on the lips.

Milan Fashion Week previews for next fall and winter entered their second day on Thursday, with runway shows by Max Mara, Fendi, Pucci, Prada and Moschino.

Max Mara opened the show with deep red ensembles of matching overcoat, trousers and top, while Karl Lagerfeld opted for red boots to set off his creations for Fendi. In both cases, the designers opted for natural lip coloring.

Audacious Pucci

Ever feel audacious, but don't want to draw too much attention?

Pucci has just the looks, and the ideal target customer taking the front row: Lindsay Lohan.

The collection was a parade of solid acid tones of green, pink and blue from the brand's archives in slinky fits and 1960s kaftans, that morphed into new Pucci psychedelic paisley prints.

While many looks were sprinkled, even splattered, in crystals, the accent de resistance was long fringe. Bouncy, colour-drenched fringe finished trouser legs, hung off shoes, and, most enticingly to Lohan, cascaded from bigrimmed raffia-inspired hats to create a privacy screen against the outside world.

The Mean Girls actress rushed to her seat just as the models were beginning their strut, raising protests from photographers.

"I want to get one of the hats. I think they are very cool," Lindsay said outside as she waited to be taken to a photoshoot.

Solid colour is the brand's statement of the season, and a bold change for Pucci, a brand known for its prints.

"I really think that Emilio Pucci could be not only a print brand, but also a solid brand," designer Massimo Giorgetti said backstage before the show. "I love this show because all the colours are originally from the archive. It is the right balance between past, the present and future."

Seduction explored at Prada

Miuccia Prada officially disavows connecting fashion with politics. So let's let the clothes speak for

Her latest collection had clear echoes of the protest movement of the 1970s, interwoven with references to today's protests asserting the rights of women and native peoples. Prada's theme was seduction, and questioning its relevance. And the implicit question: Is this all a deja vu?

Of course if you ask Prada, she will deny it all.

And yet: Crocheted bras spoke to a woman's handiwork and suggested a bygone protest era when women shed theirs, even burned them. Furry parkas with full hoods and Eskimo boots, beaded accents and trailing feathers referenced Native American cultures still fighting for control over their resources.

Prada said the collection took off from her menswear looks shown in January, just days before the U.S. presidential inauguration. The male figure was her starting point "with the idea, with too much power. . And to get back to reality, to people, to a more sensitive atmosphere."

And she did that with decidedly feminine forms and materials. Mohair dresses with a mermaid ruffle, crepe dresses with beading and feather accents, satiny gowns with knee-high red boots, clearly made for walking. There were also marabou feathered slippers.

"Me personally, my point was seduction. How necessary is seduction: Do we use the same instruments as 50 years ago? Women want to appeal and be beautiful, but how if you are intelligent?" Prada asked, adding that this is "an argument that was never discussed and probably we should discuss again."

There was handcrafted knitwear, while tweed and cordurov showed the more assertive, even homely, side. Seduction is all in the eye of the beholder.

Craft beer named as top trend in chefs' survey for third year in a row

FOOD

Pickling, sous vide cooking and smoking food also trends

Craft beer and microbrews were chosen by Canadian chefs as the restaurant industry's top trend for a third year in a row.

"Craft beer is still trending because it's still growing. There's more craft brewers opening every day all over the place. It's generating revenue for the entire market," says Charlotte Langley, culinary curator of a trade show being put on this weekend in Toronto by Restaurants Canada.

More than 560 professional chefs across the country were asked to identify the menu items and cooking methods at the peak of popularity in the association's eighth annual survey.

Food smoking and sous vide cooking are two techniques that cracked this year's top

Though charcuterie was on last year's list, Langley points to its continuing evolution.

"Rob Gentile from Buca has taken charcuterie to a whole new level in Toronto where it's all fish charcuterie," she says, adding that the acclaimed chef who also oversees British chef Jamie Oliver's two Canadian Jamie's Italian locations - cures many types of fish and even egg roe from lobster with "tasty" results.

Chefs also cited locally sourced foods and sustainable seafood in the top 10 list.

"One thing that's part of locally sourced food is traceability," says Langley, adding people want to know the provenance of their food.

Langley also sees many chefs working with seaweed. It fits with a plant-forward diet, which she considers another trend, and is "an ethically sourced product that's great for you and our food economy."

The survey also highlighted pickling, ethnic condiments (raita/raitha, chimichurri, soy sauce, sambal), Asian twists on condiments (Sriracha ketchup, kimchi mayo) and gluten-free/ food allergy conscious items.

"Pickling has evolved into more fermentation at this stage of the game. Maybe we're heading back to the '70s when everyone wanted to grow and ferment everything, which is great. But I think that you see more fermented products in grocery stores and retail outlets than vou ever have before," says Langley. "It's not just kimchi anymore."

FASHION-INSPIRED SPECIAL EDITION CARS

For decades, automakers and apparel brands have looked to capture a combined appeal with special edition versions of just about everything; from everyday compacts to exclusive supercars. Here's a list of some of the most recent — though not necessarily memorable — fashion-inspired special edition automobiles.

DAN ILIKA/AUTOGUIDE.COM

🚺 Volkswagen Beetle Denim

While not tied to a specific brand, this denim edition pays homage to a closet staple in a way only a Volkswagen Beetle could get away with. Available in both coupe and convertible, the Beetle Denim is decked out in denim-look fabric - not to mention a similarly styled soft top on convertible models - and finished with red tabs on the seats like a certain brand's iconic pants. Production was limited to a few thousand units.

2 Lamborghini Murciélago LP-640 by Versace

Versace has had its name on a handful of special edition cars over the years, but none have combined speed and sophistication quite like this Lambo. Built in both coupe and roadster forms of the Murciélago, this Versace edition added a ton of unique finishes both inside and out, and included a very limited luggage set — because, you know, there's a ton of room for luggage in a Lamborghini.

3 Fiat 500 by Gucci

The Gucci edition of this quintessential Italian compact may not scream for attention in quite the same way as the Jeremy Scott Smart ForTwo, but it's a pretty close second. First launched in 2011, the Fiat 500 by Gucci was available in both coupe and cabriolet body styles. It sported Gucci's famed green and red stripes both inside and out. Clothing brand Diesel also worked with Fiat to create a unique version of the 500, though it was only sold in Europe for the 2008 and 2009 model years.

Maserati Interiors by Ermenegildo Zegna

Okay, so this isn't exactly a special edition, but that doesn't make it any less special. Silk seating inserts and unique detailing make these cabins stand out from the rest of the Maserati models out there, including "natural fibre Mulberry Silk seating inserts" in other words, some very soft and luxurious fabric.

As of today, the trim package can be added to Ghibli, Levante and Quattroporte models.

Met offers exercise amid art

PERFORMANCE

MetLiveArts hosting classes three years in the making

New York City's cavernous Metropolitan Museum of Art has been holding lively morning workout sessions this winter amid its prized masterpieces.

The 45-minute Museum Workout sends people in exercise attire chugging through 35 galleries, past paintings, sculptures, armour and other treasures, before the venerable Fifth Avenue institution opens to the public.

On a recent morning, an overnight snowstorm didn't deter the 15 people who'd signed up for the session.

It started with a warmup: calf stretches in the museum's grand limestone entrance and an easy jog out to the Bee Gees' hit Stayin' Alive. Then came the speedy trek through the galleries and up the preserved ornate staircase of the 19th century Chicago stock exchange.

There were squats in front of John Singer Sargent's Portrait of Madame X, balancing on one leg before Henry VIII's rigid armour, a yoga pose before a bronze nude of the Roman hunting goddess Diana, and jumping jacks inbetween, all to a soundtrack of disco and Motown hits.

Why bother travelling to a Manhattan museum — some did, from Pennsylvania, Kentucky and even California — just to exercise?

"This offers you amazing moments," said participant Oliver Ryan, who runs a New York corporate wellness company. "We did our first stretch, and there in the vast gallery was Perseus holding the head of Medusa. What hit me was this was the TV of ancient times, a frozen moment from a story everyone knew." The Met commissioned the innovative Monica Bill Barnes Dance Company for the project. It was choreographed by the two women leading the workout — Monica Bill Barnes herself and her dance partner, Anna Bass — along with Robert Saenz de Viteri, the company's creative producing director.

Bass said the team worked "obsessively" calculating how to keep a safe distance from the artworks. That means no wild swinging of arms or legs, and exercising a minimum of three feet or so from any treasure.

Leading scantily clad, pumped up bodies around the artworks "really runs against the culture of being in a museum, being quiet and being still and walking slowly," said Barnes.

"We're in the business of making strange things," she added with a wry smile, "bringing dance where it doesn't belong."

De Viteri helped guide the workout session in a vintage tuxedo and sneakers, holding a laptop attached to a speaker that channeled music and recorded narration by artist and author Maira Kalman, who selected the art and gallery route.

"Something very physical happens to me when I'm in a museum. I get this rush of excitement, this kind of tingle of mad, passionate arousal," Kalman's recorded voice said as the group did side-stretches in front of a stern-looking bust of Benjamin Franklin.

The workout ends with everyone lying on their back, eyes closed, on the floor of the Met's luminous American wing. This yoga pose, called savasana, is meant to release tension from mind and body while absorbing the benefits of the dynamic exercises. Rising over the human stillness is Augustus SaintGaudens' ancient goddess — the resplendent, gilded Diana, about to release her arrow.

The first sessions, from Jan. 19 through Feb. 12, were sold out months ago. The interest was so intense that more were added, through March 9, and they're also sold out. Participants, both men and women, have ranged in age from 13 to 85.

Museum officials say there are no immediate plans for a future staging of what is essentially a "performance piece" that took three years to create, with each participant movement matching music and visuals moment by moment.

The Museum Workout was commissioned by the museum's MetLiveArts performance series and partly funded by the Jerome Robbins Foundation and One World Fund.

TRAVEL NOTES ZOO CELEBRATES BIRTH OF CALF, RESIDENTS FRET OVER REALITY SERIES AND FASHION WOWS AT EXHIBIT

Zoo welcomes calf

The Maryland Zoo in Baltimore has announced the first birth of a giraffe at the zoo in more than 20 years.

The female reticulated giraffe was born Feb. 6 to 4-year-old Juma and 11-year-old Caesar. After her first veterinary exam, officials say the calf is healthy. She's 6-feet 1-inch tall and weighs about 125 pounds.

The giraffe house will remain closed while Juma and the calf bond.

Tarantulas, scorpions greet visitors

VICTORIA

Creepy crawlies are the main attraction at B.C. bug zoo

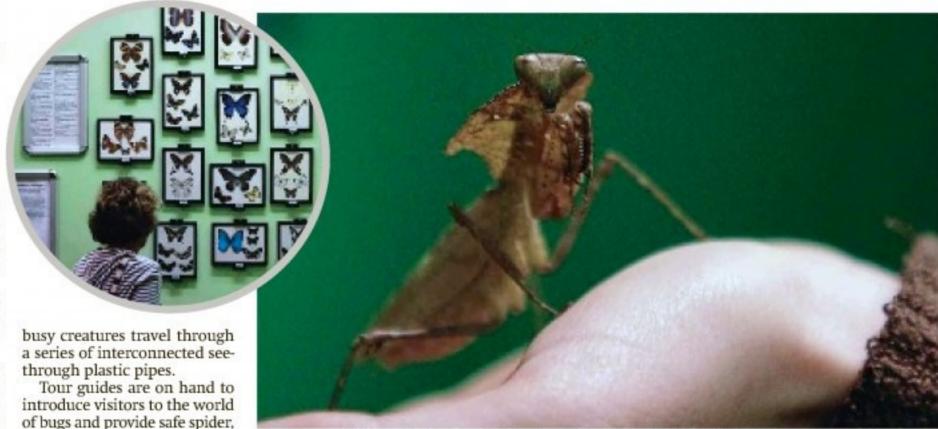

Hairy-legged tarantulas and pointy-tailed scorpions send chills of fear through most people, but at the Victoria Bug Zoo they are as friendly as newborn kittens and will rest in the palm of your hand.

The downtown mini zoo offers visitors an up-close-andpersonal view of live tropical bugs from around the world.

It also shatters long-held fears about deadly spider bites and stings as glow-in-the-dark scorpions and tarantulas the size of tennis balls are available to calmly interact with visitors.

"It felt OK," said Sally Millis of Brisbane, Australia, after she held a Chilean rose hair tarantula. "But I wouldn't be holding it anywhere else."

The bug zoo has about 50 species of insects, including giant walking sticks, robot-like praying mantises and Canada's largest ant colony, where the ever-

She said Hazel, a large Mexican red knee tarantula, is "little moody at times."

"She gets super excited," said Chudiak. "I've actually played tug-of-war with her. She'll grab onto the feeding tongs and not let go."

Hazel appeared to be in a particularly testy mood on a recent visit, standing almost upright in a fighting pose for several minutes.

Chudiak said the spiders bite and are venomous, but even though their bites will hurt, they don't possess enough venom to kill or serious hurt a person.

Jordan Krushen, general manager of the facility, said adults are also fascinated by the bugs, spiders and insects at the zoo.

He said the zoo hosted an after-hours Valentine's Day event aimed at bug lovers.

The age 19-plus gathering, "Sex on Six Legs," explored the mating habits of many different arthropods, he said.

Guides were on hand to discuss the sex habits of bugs, including nuptial gifts and traumatic insemination, Krushen said.

EXHIBITION

Show paints Vermeer as borrower

His luminous strokes produced masterpieces like Girl with a Pearl Earring.

But Vermeer, the unique jewel in Dutch painting's crown, copied ideas from his contemporaries like every other artist, argues a new major exhibit at the Louvre Museum in Paris that opened Wednesday.

Five years in the making, Vermeer and the Masters of Genre Painting presents a third of the Dutch Golden Age master's complete opus to the public. It is the biggest such collection of the old master's work in Europe in almost two decades.

It shows that, however revolutionary some elements of his paintings were, Vermeer also heavily borrowed from his rivals.

"In a way, Vermeer is not very original because he picks ideas from different contemporaries. His themes are very classical — music-making, lacemaking — that's been done before," curator Blaise Ducos said on Tuesday during a preview of the show.

Ducos said the genius of Vermeer, who died at 43 and produced just 36 paintings, can be seen in how he transformed rehashed themes and techniques.

"He has a distinct, specific psychology. I think there is a mood in Vermeer that you do not find in other paintings," Ducos said.

Vermeer's 12 oil paintings in the show, including The Milkmaid on loan from Amsterdam's Rijksmuseum, are hung side-by-side with 58 similar works by his 17th-century rivals such as Gerrit Dou and Garard ter Borch.

The exhibit also aims to dispel the widely-held belief that Vermeer was sedentary and seldom left the Dutch town of Delft.

"The show here presents another story ... all the refined paintings here prove that he must have been in touch directly with other paintings and other painters, so both in studios and collectors' mansions," said Ducos. "He must have travelled inside the Netherlands."

The exhibit runs to May 22 at the Louvre and will travel to the National Gallery of Art in Washington D.C. in the fall.

Japan pins success on martial arts

NINJA MUSEUM

Hopes for wooing more tourists in hands of ninjas

Japan is turning to those hooded samurai-era acrobatic spies known as ninja to woo tourism.

The Japan Ninja Council, a government-backed organization of scholars, tourism groups and businesses, said Wednesday that it's starting a Ninja Academy to train people in the art of ninja and building a new museum in Tokyo devoted to ninja, set to open in 2018. "The art of ninja is made up of various elements, such as combat, survival techniques and astronomy," Jinichi Kawakami, known as "the last ninja" and a master of the Koga ninja school, told reporters at the Foreign Correspondents' Club of Japan.

"We hope this will appeal to people all over the world."

The council, set up in 2015, has created an official logo for certified products and movies to nurture what it called the "ninja business," and it hopes to educate "ninja ambassadors" to promote the culture globally.

The first certified product is an origami, or folding paper, for messages shaped like a shuriken, the star-shaped daggers that ninja throw as weapons.

Hiroshi Mizohata, council vice-president, who heads the Osaka Convention & Tourism Bureau, shrugged off questions about commercializing tradition.

Dressed in a black ninja outfit, he stressed that ninja fun is good for business and potentially a big part of the government's "Cool Japan" campaign, which includes animation, video games, food and movies, especially leading up to the 2020 Tokyo Olympics.

The council put on a ninjainspired martial-arts demonstration, in which a muscular actor used rope to ward off, choke and disarm an attacker, and a woman dressed in a mini-ninja outfit did flips to recorded rock music.

It also showed a guidebook in English highlighting several ninja-related places in Japan, such as castles where ninja had been employed, a gorge used for training by Sarutobi Sasuke, a legendary ninja, and a ninjavillage theme park.

Tourism has been booming in Japan, with 24 million visitors from abroad last year, and those numbers are expected to grow.

Historically, ninja were hired by samurai as spies on enemies hence their appearance in movies, eavesdropping from attics and summersaulting escapes from rooftops. Iga and Koga clan ninja were reputed to be the best. They have inspired countless novels, movies and cartoons, including the Teenage Mutant Ninja Turtles.

According to the council, ninja can stare at a burning candle without blinking, frequently massage their ears to stay nimble and never gain weight above 130 pounds. Their diligence and perseverance, as well as their humble acceptance of anonymity, are integral parts of Japanese culture and should become a pillar export, the council argues.

Kawakami acknowledged that real ninja training was hard to pass down today, and said that was why he is called the last real ninja. But ninja had much to offer spiritually, such as the meditative focus they muster when they clasp their hands in concentration in their trademark pose.

"It is also about respect to our ancestors," Kawakami said. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Digital graffiti used to deter vandalism in Florence

Florence's famed Duomo is cleaning up its act, removing centuries of graffiti from the cathedral dome interior and letting new visitors leave their mark digitally instead.

The cathedral launched a pilot project last year in its Giotto-designed bell tower to allow visitors to use a touchscreen to leave a digital message rather than deface the 14th-century structure.

To date some 18,000 digital messages have been left, and the project was such a success that the cathedral administration said Thursday it was extending the project to Brunelleschi's dome that dominates the Tuscan city. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS

Canada's flag: Leafit to us

Sean Plummer

Though Canada turns 150 this year, our flag is a lot younger. The symbol of our nation - with its red 11-point maple leaf on a white background, flanked by fields of red wasn't unveiled until 1965.

Before that. the search for the right flag to represent Canada had gone on for decades. Prime Minister William Lyon Mackenzie King first established a committee to study the issue in 1925 but was shut down by, among others, people loyal to the Union Jack.

Another parliamentary flag committee formed by King in 1945 likewise went nowhere. It wasn't until 1963 that new prime minister Lester B. Pearson promised Canadians that they would have a flag within two years. Officials from across Canada combed through the various ideas. including thousands of designs submitted by the public.

Suggestions included such Canadian perennials as the beaver and the fleur-de-lis, as well as lions and stars. The iconic maple leaf was unanimously adopted in December 1964, with the first flag unfurled on Parliament Hill two months

"Bigger is better" sounds American, but it's the ethos of one of Canada's most amazing inventions: IMAX.

Short for "image maximum," the famous film format, which projects an image eight-stories tall, evolved from a gimmick at Expo 67 in Montreal. Today it's a way for Hollywood to make movies majestic again - think the jaw-dropping moviescapes of The Dark Knight, Star Trek and The Avengers. And speaking of jaw-dropping, the Toronto-based company's latest venture is a virtual-reality arcade launched in L.A. this past January.

SIMPLE TIPS TO COMBAT FOOD POISONING

Did you know that about 1 in 8 Canadians get sick every year from foodborne illness? Many of these cases go unreported because symptoms are similar to those of the stomach flu.

Fortunately, most cases of food poisoning can be easily prevented by following a few simple steps:

1. Clean.

Clean anything that comes into contact with food, including your hands, kitchen surfaces and utensils, and reusable grocery bags.

Use soap and warm water to wash your hands. You can use an alcohol-based hand sanitizer if soap and water are not available.

Fruits and vegetables should also be washed under running water that's safe to drink.

2. Separate.

To avoid cross-contamination, always separate raw foods like raw meat and eggs from readyto-eat foods like cooked meat and vegetables.

Put raw meat, poultry, fish and seafood in sealed containers, or in plastic bags on the bottom shelf of your refrigerator.

3. Cook.

Always cook food to a safe internal temperature. You can check this by using a digital food thermometer.

Meat, poultry, fish and seafood should be cooked within two to three days of purchase. If you don't plan to cook it within this time, it should be frozen. Remember, you can't tell if food is safe by its smell, taste or colour. When in doubt, throw it out.

4. Chill.

One of the most important things to remember is to keep cold food cold and hot food hot. This keeps it from reaching the "temperature danger zone" between 4°C and 60°C (40°F and 140°F).

Defrost raw meat, poultry and fish in the refrigerator or the microwave, or immerse it in cold water that's replaced every 30 minutes.

DITCH THE GLASSES WITH RLE

Refractive Lens Exchange (RLE) eye surgery is growing in popularity at the Gimbel Eye Centre in Calgary and for a good reason.

With an aging population, it is important to look for ways to minimize reliance on prescription glasses for farsightedness, nearsightedness or astigmatism, according to Gimbel chief operating officer Gregg Becker.

"This is great news for patients who want to enjoy the benefits of vision correction without waiting for cataract surgery. They don't need to wait until they need cataract surgery," Becker says, adding that the procedure can be done in advance of when cataract surgery would typically happen.

"This procedure eliminates the need for that surgery as time passes. In Refractive Lens Exchange, the natural lens is replaced with an artificial implant (as with cataract surgery); however, there is no waiting list for this procedure as it is not covered by Alberta healthcare."

Patients between the ages of 45 to 75 are often good candidates for RLE, Becker adds.

"We have many clients who have wanted to get rid of their glasses for years, but were not aware this is an option. The process is especially good for patients with active lifestyles who want to eliminate or minimize the need for glasses in their day to day activities."

Defenceman in on all three Calgary goals in narrow win

The Calgary Flames have put together a nice run as the regular season starts winding down.

Sean Monahan scored his 100th NHL goal, Brian Elliott made 23 saves, and the Flames beat the Tampa Bay Lightning 3-2 on Thursday night.

Dougie Hamilton had a goal and two assists, and Mikael Backlund also scored to help the Flames improve to 7-2-1 over their last 10 games.

"Sometimes it comes together and guys are clicking a little bit," Elliott said. "It's really how everybody is playing together. That's the momentum you're building, that chemistry."

Tampa Bay, which entered with a seven-game points streak (5-0-2), got goals from Vladislav Namestnikov and Nikita Kucherov. Andrei Vasilevskiy stopped 22 shots.

"You give them credit for the way they played, and they kind of clogged things up for a little bit, but I'm pinning that game on us," Tampa Bay coach Jon Cooper said. "We couldn't get our way through the neutral zone because we weren't executing. It was a collective group,

Trailblazing pivot Custis dies at 88

All Bernie Custis wanted was the chance to be a pro quarterback, but to Damon Allen he will always be a football pioneer.

Custis, pro football's first black quarterback who blazed the trail for future CFL stars like Allen, Warren Moon and Chuck Ealey, died Thursday. He was 88.

Custis made pro football history Aug. 29, 1951, when he became a starter with the Hamilton Tiger-Cats. It came after he was denied the opportunity to play the position with the NFL's Cleveland Browns.

"During Bernie's time, they could actually lock the door and keep you from actually participating," Allen said. "I got the chance to walk through a hallway (because) they couldn't lock the door, the door was already open because of Bernie.

"When you look at it that way, you have to give that kind of respect and honour to the pioneers before you."

Ealey, who arrived in Hamilton in 1972 after be-

"Bernie was a total gentleman, very respectful and humble," Ealey said. "He never used it as a framework to say, 'I was the first black quarterback to come to Canada,' or anything like that.

"We try to get them out of their stressful environments and the frights that they've lived through," said Maher Nakib, 40, the technical director of Hoops Lebanon, the sports association behind the project.

Of the one million Syrian refugees the UN says are living in Lebanon, more than half are under 18 years old. Syrians here face legal and other forms of discrimination, and many parents are hesitant to let their children play outside in the crowded alleys of Beirut's poorer neighbourhoods, where most of the refugees live.

The month-long Hoops program provides a safe environment where the children can blow off steam, as well as learn self-confidence and teamwork.

"They come back home and they're too tired to fight," smiles Fatima Tayjan, a refugee from the Syrian city of Aleppo who has enrolled three of her four children in the program.

GOD DEMANDS TOTAL OBEDIENCE

God is indeed merciful. His mercies saved the people of Nineveh when He sent Jonah to preach a message of repentance to them. They all obeyed the commandment of the king to fast and turn from their evil ways. "Then God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; and God relented from the disaster that He had said He would bring upon them, and He did not do it". (Jonah 3:10 NKJV) God is calling you to forsake your old ways and accept Jesus as your Lord; obey His call and be saved.

Creamy Broccoli and Cheese Soup

Ceri Marsh & Laura Keogh For Metro Canada

A generous serving of cheddar gives this vegetarian soup a satisfying creaminess.

Ready in 35 minutes

Prep time: 10 minutes Cook time: 25 minutes Serves 4

Ingredients

- · 4 cups broccoli florets and stem (cut off tough ends) chopped fairly small
- 1 onion chopped
- · 2 cups chopped, peeled potato
- · 2 cloves garlic minced
- 1 glug olive oil
- · 4 cups stock (vegetable or chicken, low sodium)
- · 1 1/2 cups milk
- 1 cup grated cheddar 1/4 cup grated Parmesan

salt and pepper to taste

Directions

- 1. Sauté onion and garlic in a Dutch oven or other large, heavy-bottomed pot for about 5 minutes until soft.
- 2. Add vegetables and stock and allow to simmer for about 20 minutes until the vegetables are tender.
- 3. In small batches, ladle the broth and vegetables into your blender and purée. Pour each batch into a bowl as you go. Pour the puree back into your pot.
- 4. Over medium heat add milk and cheese and stir until the cheese melts. Add salt and pepper to taste.

* IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20 This is a marvelous day to schmooze with others. Enjoy the company of friends, and in particular, enjoy the company of groups. People are warmhearted today.

Taurus April 21 - May 21 You look good to others today. In part, people see that you are ready to show your affection for others, and they like this. (Of course they do - everyone wants to be loved and appreciated.)

Gemini May 22 - June 21 Travel for pleasure will appeal to you today. This also is a good day to mingle with people from different backgrounds and other cultures.

Cancer June 22 - July 23 It will be easy to take part in discussions about inheritances and shared property today, because people are in a good mood. In addition, they feel cooperative and generous. (That's all you need.)

 Leo July 24 - Aug. 23 Relations with others are very positive today. Entertain at home. Don't hesitate to let others know how much you care for them.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23 This is a good day at work because coworkers are supportive. You also might see ways to make your workspace look and feel more attractive. Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23 This is a great day for a date or any kind of social outing. Enjoy sports events and playful activities with children. Whatever interactions you have today will be warm and rewarding.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22 Entertain at home today. Invite the gang over for good food and drink! Discussions with female family members will be positive and warm.

✓ Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21 All your communications with others today will be upbeat and affectionate. This is a strong day for writers and salespeople, as well as those of you who teach or act.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20 You can boost your income today, because this is a financially favorable day. If shopping, you will want to buy beautiful things for yourself and loved ones.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19 This is a positive, feel-good day because the Moon is in your sign, dancing nicely with Venus. Enjoy schmoozing with others.

) Pisces

Feb. 20 - March 20 Work alone or behind the scenes today, because you feel content and happy with the world. You want to take some time just for you, and why not? Find a comfy place and enjoy your favorite drink.
